SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1850. THE ASPIRATION.

BY P. HENRY. My back is on life's troubled sea, I care not where it goes; What matter life's wild storms to me? The best of earth, its hopes and joys, are droamy, fading things : We wish, we sigh, we greep some prize

It is not that no eye hath smiled, To light my weary way:
'Tis not because whate'er I loved,
That death has loved it too: No, 'tis not this that makes me sad, And careless where I go. I've madly loved, yet all in vain;
Still madly, still unblest,
I love, and nurse the growing pain

It is not that I hate the world,

That burns within my breast My heart must weep, it will not break-My soul must writhe and bear— And none shall know the inward sche, By word, or sign, or tear, Unloved I came, unloved I go; What is there left for me? What bitterness is yet to know.

When gone for aye from thee? When driven down life's dark abysa, And death is harging o'er, will not wish I'd loved thee less, But thou had'st loved me more

The allusions of the poets to flowers constitute some of their happiest illustrations. Indeed, no man can be truly a poet unless he has been a close observer of Nature. The has been a close observer of Nature. The rose, the cowslip, the golden king-cup, the violet, the "pied daisy," or, as it should be written, "day's eye," have each embellished the philosophy of Shakspeare; and nearly all the poetic writers of our day have, in succession, discovered some new beauty in the gay domain of flowers, from the rose and purple violet to the delicate acacia, or the circling cleinatis—fair emblem of still fairer woman! In our experience of life—and we have had our portion of its cares—we know of no relief so gratifying to a wearied spirit as that which a flower-garden affords; and when circumstances have permitted us to leave musty

Awakes to life bedewed with tears,
And flings around its fragrance mild;
And, where no rival flowerets bloom,
Amidst the bare and childing gloom
A beauteous gom app'ars,
All weak and wan, with bead inclined,
Its parent breast, the drifted snow,
It trembles, while the ruthless wind le trembles, while the runless wind Bends its alim form; the tempest lowers,
Its emera'd eye drops crystal showers
On its co'd bed below.
Wher'er I find thee, gentie flower,
Thou still art sweet and dear to me;
For I hars known the chestiess hour,
Have seen the sunbeams cold and pale,
Have felt the chilling wintry gale,
And wept and shrunk, like thee!

BUYING TOO DEAR.—There is an old proverb which says "A man may buy gold too dear." We do not know where it originated, but the We do not know where it originated, but the apothegm is an exceedingly wise one, let it come from whose head it might.

Johnso.—An Englishman and an American were travelling together between two of our large cities, on an occasion before railways had brouget places into the intimate connexion with each other which now exists. The former was a man of honest disposition, well informed in many matters, and possessing a very good opinion of himself. The American was frask; conversible, and very well disposed to be amused with the other in all his humors.
The Englishman, although sufficiently liberal, had not yet an acquaintance with the different shades of character, and the peculiarities which distinguish our citizens from his ties which distinguish our citizens from his own countrymen, and very broadly decounced eur "common people" as "insufferably in-solent." The American laughed, and told him he thought they were perticularly civil, but that, perhaps, the manners of the two nations towards persons in different conditions of life were not similar, and might lead to ocof life were not similar, and might less to oc-casional misunderstanding. But the English-man declared that "you could not be free with the common people without being insuited, and if you held yourself aloo, from them you were neglected." The American told him he should try "a native." On arriving at a tavern, they decided to preve the lostler, who should try "a hatire." On arrying at a tavern, they decided to prove the kostler, who was a plain-looking man; and, after taking some refreshment, the American, in a pleasant and easy tone of voice, said to him; "Colonel, did you give the horses any water?" "No, I didn't, Captain." "Then, I'll thank you to give them a little," said he. "I'll do that directly "anywared the other cheerfully taking

The Englishman hearing these titles used so flowers has ever been considered one of the most elegant pleasures. It is also one of the most gratifying to our feelings, for each succeeding month puts forth some fresh blossom in return for the care bestowed. Even dread mid-winter is partially enlivened by the flowers of the gay lauristinus.

The allusions of the poets to flowers constitute some of their happiest illustrations. In deed, no man can be truly a poet unless he has been a close observer of Nature. The astonishment and firmness, graffly replied, "I'm no more a colonel than you are, sir;" but readily joined in the laugh which con-valsed the Englishman's companion, who afterwards remarked to him, "When you un-bend with a poor fellow, do so thoroughly: Jonathan likes a joke, but can't bear ridi-

CHIVALRY Much of the strange mixture of ferocious cruelty, with refined gallantry denominated Chivalry, which ancient annals hand down to us, was attributable, undoubted-ly, to the intercourse of the Christians with the Moors and Arabs. > Dr. Adam Clarke, the author of the celebrated "Commentaries on the Bible," on being admitted into full connection with his religious denomination, was asked, as usual, certain questions. Among other questions always asked at that time, was the following: "Are you in debt?" Though rather a whim-sical incident, this question was likely to have deeply puzzled and non-plussed Mr. Clarke. Walking in the street that morning, with another preacher, a poor man asked a half-penny. Mr. C. had none, but borrowed one asomer preacuer, a poor man asked a fairpenny. can be bought too dear.
The broker will tell you that he buys gold too dear, who gives five dollars a-piece for sovereigns, when their market value is but four dollars and eighty-three cents. The broker buys money merely to sell again; and he therefore, consider it only in relation to what it will yield him.

But there are cases where gold may be bought too dear, earlogether too dearly when life, health, friendship, conscience, or peace of mind, is sacrificed in the purchase. Yet, how often does the one, or the other, or all of these happen, in the other, or all it sought too dear buy the sole end and aim of silenge a portion of mankind!

Gold is bought too dear by the man who, leaving friends, relations, fireside, and home, seeks a distant land—If may be an unbealthy climate—solely with the view of amassing a fortune sooner than it could be acquired at lance, and unexposed to the dangers and privations of the distant land—If may be an unbealthy climate—but at what expense? Health is gone. He returns with his gold, but it has cost him too dear. He is, no dont; to some the object of envy for his wealth; but to others, and the most judicious part of mankind, he is the object of pity, rather, on account of his folly, who has bartered the noblest of the sold and a broken the object of or lay, rather, on account of his gold when purchased. With a sallow countenance, an enfectbled guit, and a broken the passes of the pass of shinage has been been seen and of friends. He has subjected himself to death—and, the signal pass, then share the passage and carposed the search of the passage and carposed himself to death—and through he has not fallen a prey to the latter in a foreign clime, he has merely obtained a rispite for a few short and mispace, and the course and competence is all a misn can enjoy; and all beyond is, of cause, no better than so much beyond is, of cause,
