over $300.

Mr. Ohliton desired to know how far the case comes within the rule inade by the dourt as to an expression of sympathy. Sympathy on both sides; is veryindefinite. There may be a preponderance on sither side.

The Judge. Sympathy on one side amounts to ditqualification. Sympathy on both sides, with general regret at the courfence, does not.

Mr. Ohliton, Then the court strikes a balance. That is what we want to know. Ohallenged peremptority.

John McDermott had read the principal portion of the testimony at the coroner's inquest, and had wagne, indefinite impressions on his mind. As to what effect they might have on him as a juror, he could not say.

Q. If aworn as a juror would you discharge your dity impartially?

Janor. I should, endeavor to do so, but would rather not take the responsibility.

To the Judge. He had a wague impression which he could not dignly by the title of opinion. Cannot answer as to what effect the impressions might have on him, or te what extent his mind is biased.

The Judge thought the answer amounted to a nonformation of opinion, and thought him qualified.

Mr. McDermott was then aworn in as the touth juror.

Leonidas Coyle, had both formed and expressed.

less I cannot see any cause that would be. In deciding on this question I do not think the nice distinctions attempted to be made should apply at all.

Mr. Magruder, for the defence, asked whether he would not be permitted to sak the jaror if his opinion was not hypothetical:

The Judge. The jaror has already stated it is mide inp on what he heard and read, Erospition was taken to this ruling.

Elijah Edmonston had expressed an opinion, and if sworn as a jaror he would acquit the prisoner. Laughter.

Mr. Magruder argued that the jaror was not disqualified. The juror has said he had, a bias in favor of the prisoner from what he had read, in favor of the prisoner from what he had read. If that be true, might they not ask him whether, from that present state of his mind, he bould not at as a compacent juror.

The Judge though the was the law of this case.

The Judge though the variance of the prisoner from what he had read. If that be true, might they not ask him whether, from that present state of his mind, he bould not into or jurors. Belga to twen the law of this case.

The District Attorney submitted that after the arready of the future of the juror further examination was unmoscently.

Mr. Phillips thought the formation of an opinion amounted to nothing, it the opinion was founded on mere rumor. If he could, atta as an impartial juror the formation of an opinion was founded on mere rumor. If he could, atta as an impartial juror the formation of an opinion would not disqualified. The juror had said he had a biast of the prisoner from what he had read, it fast the present rate of his mind, be would not disqualified. The Judge. Gentlemen or the Jury: What is your desirs about this matter?

A Juror. We desire to be dis-harged. (Langhter.) Mr. Etanton I am authorized by the prisoner to say that we assent to the arrangement proposed.

The Judge directed Mr. wright, the twelfth juror, to be in court at 10 colock to-morrow, and to d the jury to make arrangements for a long absence from their familes. He gave them the usual caution, and then the court, adjourned.

The jury is composed as follows:

Incidents of the Sickles Trial.

Incidents of the Sickles Trial. STRANGE REPORT RELATING TO THE ELEVENT JUROR.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—The only emotion exhibited by Mr. Sickies since the commondement of the trial was when his old friend, Robert Julien, of Now York, stepped up to bim to-day in the dock, and greeted thim. Mr. Sickies turn-daway his head to conceal the fears that suffused his eyes.

The arrangement made by the counsel for the defence is: Mr. Graham to make the opening speech, after the case filt the prises billion is closed; Mr. Stand ton to links the arguments on the points of law; Mr. Briddy to examine the witheases, and, with Mr. Chilling to the country of the mr. Standard and seventy wen summoned as jucore, struck with surprise the New York counsel. They ray they have never seen so fine a collection of jucors. The fact that while they expressed sympathy with the prisoner, they yet we shonorable cu.ugh to avid their incompletoney to serve, shows what public opinion is if the best classes of society here. As to the question of property qualification for jurors, about which so much was said to-day, it may not be sained to the amount of $250, and his not being so assessed is a cause of challenge. One of the jurore, Wm. M. Moore, the eleventh on the list, is understood to have stated that, since he was sworn, he has some to the conclusion in his mind was mont will jurn biased. Mr. Foirce continued criticising the evidence of the claimants, and particularly that of Marchal Joukius: He thought it a hard thing that the expressions of a man tortured from him by four about the used to his disadvantage. The volidity of the record as a matter of evidence was also argued for over an hour. The evidence was also argued for over an hour. The evidence of the vitnesses for the claimant he thought was contradictory, and proved nothing. He was very sarchastic on Mr. Gulick, who had scruples as to an path, but who would tell a lie. He compared the evidence of his own witnesses with those of the claimant, and thought, in balancing the ledger, the account was on his side.

[Half-past five.—Daylight begins to break! Mr. Peirce has just concluded. Several nightlong sitters are departing, but fresh arrivals are pouring in. The excitoment grows as the hours grow, and as the case approaches its fermination the interest becomes intense. Mr. Browster rises to speak. Daniel is awake.]

Mr. Browster closed in a speech of over an hour in lought. It was impassioned, carnest, and elequent. He spoke of the odium that he had received on account of this case, and said that he had received on account of this case, and said that he had received on account of this case, and said that he had received an anenymons letter tanning him in a cruel and heartless menner. He had been told twice during that day, "There was Brewster now." That the "Browster now" are law-abiding men. When the "Browster now are not now the hoped to God it would not be the last.
