In commerce, as a everything else, however, evil must altimately reach a culminating point and work its own reform. That point is being rapidly at tained by our Manhattan neighbors in their overreaching endeavors to divert from its natural channels the trade of the South and West. The overbearing game, which has been too long played by New Yorkers through the breakneck schedule system of their Cen-

that merchants, throughout the South and Southwest, have a decided preference for trading with Philadelphia over New York. There is a straightforward candor and democratic frankness in our mode of dealing for which Southern men have an instinctive af. finity. It is a fact, which every one, of any personal knowledge of the relative manner of merchants here and there, is perfectly aware of, that the same depreciating spirit which prompts a Gothamite to nickname the Quaker City a "provincial town," at the same time makes every other place in the Union, outside of New York, appear, through his egotistical glasses, equally con temptible. Such a course may succeed while circumstances combine to compel it, but no lobger. There is nothing more certain than phia will hold her more boastful rival at : serious disadvantage. No one can be so blind as not to see that ere long the United States must become an exporting nation, when Philadelphia, from her geographical position, must inevitably become the greatest distributing port in the world. The great railroad lines which will converge here must forever continue to be the most natural channels for the produce of the South the West, and the Northwest, to reach tide water. With the Sunbury and Erie, the Bal timore and Ohio, and the Pennsylvania; Central roads, draining every section of our country, the roins are put into the hands of Philadelphia, so effectually to control the transportation of produce from the interior, that nothing short of the most stolid indiffer ence to her interests can over wrest it from her grasp. All great public improvement have their uses; their abuses, however, can not be too promptly exposed. What the le gitimato uses of the New.
