

THE PROGRESS OF PHILADELPHIA.

It is difficult to realize the progress of Philadelphia in the last five years. Important improvements of every kind have steadily advanced, and while they have attracted comparatively little attention, they have greatly increased the elements of municipal wealth, and, by their own influence, only to the comfort and convenience of our citizens and the strangers who visit us.

The great progress of consolidation has become a fact, and a consolidation of contiguous municipalities is effected. Many difficulties had to be surmounted, but they have now nearly all been mastered, and only legislation, by the immense value of the interests it controls.

While the improvement of the city is the subject of constant solicitude, and the foundation of comfortable dwellings, many of which are models of architectural beauty, have been erected, the central portions of the city have been greatly improved.

The North Pennsylvania Railroad has been completed, and is now open to traffic. It is a grand improvement, and has opened up a new era of commerce and industry.

The Erie Railroad, after a long and arduous struggle, has been completed. It is a grand improvement, and has opened up a new era of commerce and industry.
