It is correctly stated that one Miller, convicted with others for conspiracy to commit burglary, made disclosures after his sentence to the district attornoy, Mr. Lloyd, implicating Mr. Updegroff, and others in passing counterfeit money. It should have been added, that in an affidavit, which Miller afterwards made, he states that Up- degroff, Winegarden and others, whom he had implicated by his disclosures to Lloyd, were en- tirely innocent of any complicity whatever in the matter, and confessing that he had invented the story to impose upon Mr. Lloyd, and induce him to procure his pardon. It was further in evidence on the trial that he called on Mr. Lloyd on the evening before the United States Court, in June last, and stated to him that he could not swear as he had before sta- ted to him. Other matters were stated in the affidavit reflect- ing rather discreditably upon Mr. Lloyd. This affidavit, procured without the knowledge of Mr. Updegroff, subsequently came into his possession; and as it so fully vindicated him from the oharges made against him, and which were then patient do rignated, he earthlide it to several of his friends who knew he had been charged by Miller for the only purpose of vindicating the stiller for which action was brought. The defence offered to prove the trath of the libel. Two witnesses tostified that Miller, his wife, and Lloyd were on the river bank at twelve o'clock on Sunday night, and when they (Miller and wife) got into the boas tuloy returned. An anonymous lotter was also shown in evidence, regularly post-marked, and proved to have been obtained from Miller, to Whom it was directed, which, by experts from Philadelphia and other parts of the State, and persons well acquainted with Mr. Lloyd's handwriting. (whom ANNE of Austia loved	The omission of some important lacts, which it is to be hoped was not intontional, has done much injustice to Mr. Updegroff. It is correctly stated that one Miller, convicted with others for conspiracy to commit burglary, made disclosures after his sentence to the district attornoy, Mr. Lloyd, implicating Mr. Updegroff, and others in passing counterfeit money. It should have been added, that in an affidavit, which Miller afterwards made, he states that Up- degroff, Winegarden and others, whom he had implicated by his disclosures to Lloyd, were en- tirely innocent of any complicity whatever in the matter, and confessing that he had invented the story to impose upon Mr. Lloyd, and induce him to procure his pardon. It was further in evidence on the trial that he called on Mr. Lloyd on the evening before the United States Court, in June last, and stated to him that he could not swear as he had before sta- ted to him. Other matters were stated in the affidavit reflect- ing rather discreditably upon Mr. Lloyd. This affidavit, procured without the knowledge of Mr. Updegroff, subsequently came into his possession; and as it so fully vindicated him from the oharges made against him, and which were then patient do rignated, he earthlide it to several of his friends who knew he had been charged by Miller for the only purpose of vindicating the stiller for which action was brought. The defence offered to prove the trath of the libel. Two witnesses tostified that Miller, his wife, and Lloyd were on the river bank at twelve o'clock on Sunday night, and when they (Miller and wife) got into the boas tuloy returned. An anonymous lotter was also shown in evidence, regularly post-marked, and proved to have been obtained from Miller, to Whom it was directed, which, by experts from Philadelphia and other parts of the State, and persons well acquainted with Mr. Lloyd's handwriting. This letter ad- mits the truth of Miller's affidavit, was the ileved to be in his handwriting. This letter ad- mits the truth of whis resenting at home,	 iy that the monster could not find a lawyer who would bring a libel suit against the editor who exposed his villainy. PROF. F. S.
