Desperate Affray at Huntsville, Ark. Desperate Affrey at Huntsville, Ark[From the Favetteville Arkansian, July 2]

Since our lest issue, our quiet timm was thrown into a high state of excitement, by a report that there had occurred on the public square of our sister town. Huntsville, a fatal renonntre, wherein Forester Black, Eq. son of Col. Wm. Black of this city, and Mr. Warren Sams, a merchant of Huntsville, were killed immediately, and John Black and Dr. James Emithem, of this city, and Constable Moody and James Sams, of Huntsville, were reverely wounded. All the above named parties were personally known to most of our citsans, and the atmost anxiety was felt and manifested to know the particulars of the distress-of the affair as it has book isveral oye-witnesses: It appears that on Friday, the 24th inst. some alteroation between James Sams, the son of Warren Sams, and Forester Black, took place, in which insulting words and threatening actions were used insulting words and threatening actions were used insulting words and threatening actions were used. Sams, and Forester Black, took place, in which insulting words and threatening actions were used by young Sams towards Black. No collision, however, resulted not this time, and it was suncosed that there would be no further quartel. Several bours afterwards, some hard words were interchanged between Warren Sams and Forester Black, when both drew weapons, the former a bowle-knie, and the latter a revolver. Black's clistol missed fire twice, and was discharged at Sams twice the last shot, as is supposed, taking effect in the head of Sams, Sams, in the weantime, advancing on Black with his knife. One of our informants states that Sams was in the act of falling, when the report of frearms from an unexpected quarter was heard, and Sams fell instantly. Just at this time, young Sams came running up with a double barroled shot gun, and discharged one barrol, at the dislance of six or eight feet, into the side of Mr B'ack, and just as he was falling fred the other barrel io o his back, both bar rels heavily obarged with buckshot. Young Sams then attacked Dr. James Smitheon, knocking him down with his gun when Dr. D C Pmitheon a brother of James, advancing to aid his brother, truck at Sams with a gun, but missed him and felled his brother to the ground. James S nithson, whe, it seems, was unarmed, wrested the shot-gun from the hands of D. C. Smitheon and chased with ourly of triple sicel. He thus, unfortunate lr, fell at the age of trenty-five years, leaving young wife, sisters and brothers, and an aged fa ther to bewall his untimely and.
