

The Press.

THURSDAY, JULY 28, 1859.

"The Fourth," at the Lakes of Killarney. Connected with the New York press for many years, particularly before the death of John Quincy Adams...

From this we call the best lines, alluding to the Freedom Bells as home upon the soil of the land of the North...

On their arrival you pressed them to your bosom, you acknowledged their work, you gave them a warm and independent welcome...

Notice for its peculiar marble (one, the only one of the kind in the entire ground, and one that is certainly much less liable to dilapidation than the other, because the marble is not in a solid block, but is in a shell, and is surrounded by a soft, porous material...
