The Congress Rubber Company and myself contended for many years during the original term of the patent in many different circuits; extended: Poblained about hity injunctions more. I commenced some thirseen sults in Baltingre against as many respectable firms there. They combined together, and employed able cousel, who was instructed to insist, and did insist that Tudon was the owner of the rights I claimed. The Court decided in my favor, and against Judson's alleged title. It ns to me that after such a prolonged contest, and a victory so fairly obtained, no high-minded or honorable man should be guilty of further trying to sustain Judson's pro or to impose them upon honorable merchants fair business men, to their injury and my loss.

The instituations against the decision of the Court will be understood by the public as being the not unusual grumblings of a deceated party, who has the bed taste to express them hearing, and that the defence was not based alleged against you that you permitted upon Judgor's pretended title. The npshot our statements to pass unanswered.

But this question of construction was raised and argued in those cases, and the great majority of the opinions expressed upon such partial hearings were in concurrence with that arrived at by his Honor Judge Giles upon full and final You ask me to prepare a correct history of congratulate you upon this final result in your your titles and of the litigation which has resulted in this late decision. Permit me to say that I think those who deal in the articles covered by your contracts with Goodyear are more interested in what the Court has declared to be the effect of those titles, as that imdiately concerns their business, than in the history of them, or of the litigation which has arisen upon them. Besides, a full and accurate statement of these titles, and a history of this litigation, would fill a volume. Mr. Jud son has found an octavo volume of a hundred and fifty pages hardly sufficient to set forth in the most succinct legal phraseology a state ment of his protended title to one branch of your business. The example set by your ad versaries in this respect seems to me to h rather better avoided than followed, as state ment and counter-statement, argument and reargument to the public, through the public press, would lead not only to no useful or goo esult, but to no result whatever. There is one fact, however, which, if not directly stated, is implied in the card of Mr. Judgon. He speaks of a contest of fifteen years' duration, between yourself, floodyear, and his licensees, and would have it inferred that the present litigation arises from these old controversies. I am not aware of any suit now pending between yourself and any of the licensees of Goodyear, except William Judson, or of any litigation which has not been dior of any litigation which has not been di-rectly promoted by and is not now carried on diseases free of Court oan be committed on the state of the more than a year since all the old litiga tions were withdrawn or agreed to be with drawn from the Courts. A year ago I was not aware of any opposition to your titles, or of any desire to contest them. It was not uni after the 28th of September, 1858, when Good year was induced to make a pretended conveyance to the Union India-public Dompan f certain rights, which he had previously con veyed to you that there was any immediate prospect of litigation. When we learned that that subsequent conveyance was instigated by Wm, Judson, and that it was made for his benefit and that the rights attempted to be conveyed either had been or would be transferred to him, your counsel knew that you would not he permitted to carry on your business in peace. The present litigation is the result of that interference on his part, and the oldest title which he has hitherto presented against yours is a deed from the Union India-rubbe Company to himself, bearing date April 18 1859. So far as the "Nashawannuck Company" are concerned, I never heard of it, o of its having any title under Goodyear, un til after the extension of Goodyear's patent Goodyear ignored its existence, in the accounts on which he obtained his extension, an which were prepared by Mr. Judson, or un der his direction. If it had been known that such a Company existed, and were infringing on your titles, it would have been pro socuted while those titles were held by the Congress Rubber Company. There is no title created by Goodycar in 1844 which has as yet eon exhibited to the courts, or which can b ound on the records of the Patent Office; under which any claim can be made adversely your titles, which is not reviewed and dispose of in the opinion delivered at Baltimore. A all these pretended titles have been attempted to be created since the execution of the deeds from Goodycar to yourself, you cannot be justly accused of any desire to reopen, or o having renewed, this litigation. The recen result has shown that the ancient enmity which ought to revive those controversies to you injury has been of no avail.

Permit me to congratulate you upon this mos just determination, and to express the hope that all future discussion, upon your part, conhibits attached, containing upwards of one huncerning your rights, and the effect of decision upon them, will take place in the courts, and history of it, were stated at length. Upon an examination of Mr. Judson's card, I'de not find that you will not feel called upon to notice any future misrepresentations which may be adver ised by your opponents. Respectfully yours, T. A. Jenekes.

affects the claim set up by him. I was not aware till after the papers in the canso had been read, that Mr. Dickerson would not take part in the argument. He was expected to have been present, and I did not learn that there was any objection on the part of the defendants, or their counsel, to his arguing in their behalf. If Mr. Judson and Mr. Dickerson were not present and active in the conduct of the cause, it was clearly because they chose to be absent, and I doubt, if any one who has read the opinion of the Court, and their several cards, can perceive where they have railed.
