MEDICINAL.

MRS. WINSLOW,
AN EXPERIENCED NURSE AND FEMALE Physician, presents to Mothers her
SOOTHING SYRUP
FOR CHILDREN TEETHING, which greatly facilitates the process of teething by softening the gums, reducing all inflammation; will allay ALL PAIN and spasmodic action, and REGULATE THE BOWELS.
Depend upon it, mothers, it will give rest to yourselves and relief and health to your infants.
We have put up and sold this article for over five years, and can say in confidence and truth of it what we have never been able to say of any other medicine—NEVER HAS IT FAILED IN A SINGLE INSTANCE to effect a cure when timely used. We never have known an instance of dissatisfaction by any person who used it. On the contrary, all are delighted with its operations, and speak in terms of highest commendation of its magical effects and medical virtues. We speak what we do know after many years' experience, and pledge our reputation for the fulfillment of what we here declare. In fact, we say unto all, as they will call and see us, and realize the truth of our statements, that
THE SYRUP WILL DO WHAT WE CLAIM FOR IT,
without the least hesitation or fear of disappointment. Given under our hands and seals, at No. 13 Chatham Square, in the City of New York, this 1st day of July, 1849.
MRS. WINSLOW, No. 13 Chatham Square.
In the presence of
JOHN F. DAKIN, Chemist, 10 Ann street.
JOHN GEDNEY, M.D., 13 Chatham Square.
THOUSANDS OF CASES
Of the most distressing character have been entirely relieved by the use of this Soothing Syrup. In no instance has it been known to fail, when administered according to the directions, to produce the most happy and immediate results. Many of the most eminent physicians use it in their practice and in their own families, and concede it to be the most wonderful medicine ever discovered. In fact, no other medicine could long retain its hold upon the confidence of the community in the midst of innumerable pretenders, were it not founded upon the most undoubted merit.
Sold by Druggists throughout the world. Principal Office, No. 205 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.
Price only 25 cents per bottle.

Water and Clothing.
BY THE BARD OF TOWER HALL.

Those who purchase Bennett's clothing,
Laugh at all the songs we've sung,
Though they know their cash is cheaply,
Will not have a tuneful tongue!

For it seemed that their stomachs
Are not exactly digesting
That is vulgar theme of Bennett,
They now call it nauseous messing.

In the "Great Curve" around them,
On which they have been descending,
There, without the aegis from Bennett's,
Gaming health for which they're panting;

For the fact, your humble servant,
Seeing with stitches, not in breeches,
But about the marrow animal,
Long have thought that very near them,

Was the day we said the final
Having tried a host of doctors
Till their faith was fairly shaken,
And secreting, price unquestioned,

By the pint, which they have taken
Seeking health—we speak it plainly,
Found we love and will not shock it—
Not a doctor could relieve them

Save of money in the pocket—
But for every sou mail'd sluggish—
Heart the truth; and don't it gripe it—
There's balm in healing water

For the sick who dare to try it.
It has tuned all kinds of sickness,
From a stomach's gentle coaxing
To the stubbornness of a victim

Who was bitten buying clothing,
Eyes he went to Bennett's Tower in,
Where the bargains rare are known
As "a perfect fit in admiration,"

As "all purchases taken alone."

The Press.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 27, 1859.

Bronze Money.

Among the recent money-grants voted to the British Government, by the House of Commons, is the sum of $50,000 for alterations in the copper coinage of England. It is intended, as we have done in this country, to reduce the size of the inferior coin, and, to change the metal—only, instead of nickel, (which was first issued here in 1857,) the material will be bronze. This metal has already been tried for coinage in Canada and Nova Scotia, and the new issue in England will resemble the small coinage adopted in those colonies.

Mr. GLADSTONE, who, as Chancellor of the Exchequer in England, has a surveillance over the coinage of that country, announced, when asking for the above-mentioned $50,000, that this sum was not to be expended, but lent, as the profit to be derived from the new coinage would more than cover the expense, and the first outlay would be repaid. In fact, there is such a profit upon the making of metallic money in England that the Mint is fully self-supporting, and might be made much more so, if the old practice of leasing out the money-making to a sort of confederated band of Moneyers were dispensed with. Custom, however, continues a practice by which the country loses money.

We have not obtained any very recent statistics on this head, but know that in the twenty years between 1816 and 1836, the money actually coined at the Mint in London, amounted to $340,000,000; that the charge for coining this amount of gold, silver, and copper, was $2,105,000; that the actual cost was $1,070,000, leaving a profit of $1,035,000 to the worshipful Company of Moneyers. All that amount might have been saved if the Mint had been really a government establishment as ours is. Neither, with all their profits, have the aforesaid Company of Moneyers yet availed themselves of the most recent mechanical and scientific inventions for perfecting and simplifying the coinage. In this respect the Mint in Philadelphia is far ahead of that on Tower Hill, in London—its machinery, a wonder of beautiful mechanism, not being surpassed even in France, where some of the finest coins and most beautifully-executed medals have been made, during the present century.

There are private establishments in Birmingham, at which coin and medals are made, with machinery very greatly better than that which is used in the Royal Mint in London. In the time of OLIVER CROMWELL, the money coined at the Mint was wholly a Government operation. The result was that silver crown-piece, in which the bust of the great Protector is a miracle of art and beauty, executed by THOMAS SIMON, in 1658, in successful rivalry of the exquisite money made for CHARLES I, by NICHOLAS BRIOT, his master. On the Restoration, this SIMON was dismissed, because he had worked for CROMWELL, and CHARLES II, to whom he presented the dies for another crown-piece, eclipsing the beauty of that which he had fashioned for CROMWELL, refused to have this coin made. The fact is, CHARLES had sold the privilege of coining, to the Company of Moneyers, who refused to use SIMON's dies, avowing that the work in them was so delicate that extra labor must be used to produce coin from them, which would so much augment the cost of coinage, that "it would not pay."

Nor was this a solitary instance. In 1846, a crown-piece of Queen VICTORIA, one of the most beautiful pieces of engine-money ever fashioned, was coined at the Mint, in London. After about 10,000 of these had been issued, the Company of Moneyers refused to work off any more. The engraving was so elaborate and so delicate that unusual care, which involved slower work, had to be used, and the Company of Moneyers demanded so much extra payment that a small loss would have been incurred by the nation on the issue of each piece. A Government which knew its duty would have insisted on the coinage of the new crown-pieces proceeding, according to contract, but the Prime Minister of that day was the incompetent Lord JOHN RUSSELL, who was more intent on providing his relatives with fat sinecures than in improving any thing. He might have dismissed the exacting Company of Moneyers, but he allowed them to dictate to the Government, and discontinue making the new coin. Its value was really one dollar and a quarter, but, once known to be withdrawn, a fancy price was asked and received for it. We recollect having paid five times its nominal value for this Victoria crown, soon after it was issued, and saw twice that amount offered in 1851. We believe that JOSEPH MICKLEY, Esq., of this city, has a fine specimen in his valuable and curious collection of American and foreign coins and medals.

The copper coinage of England is in a very wretched condition, unequal in value and imperfect in execution. The greater portion of it is very old. More than one-fifth of it dates between 1797 and 1805. The penny (two cents) of 1797 weighs exactly an ounce, having been coined at the rate of sixteen to the pound. The penny of VICTORIA is much lighter, twenty-six making a pound weight of copper. Since 1852, only fifteen per cent. of copper money has been coined.

The total amount of copper money in circulation in the United Kingdom is $4,000,000 in current value. This consists of 3,500 tons of copper. Taking this copper at £107 10s. per ton, the actual value is only $1,895,000. Therefore, of the copper coin of England, the intrinsic value is less than one-half the nominal or apparent value. The penny of 1797 is worth nearly half as much again as the copper penny of 1852.

The copper-coinage in circulation in London is much more worn and battered than that in country circulation. In London, Birmingham, and other large towns, the copper money has been reduced to one-third of its nominal value. Much of it is counterfeit, and there is no small infusion of foreign money. One-third of the whole copper money circulated in England is counterfeit, foreign, or battered and worn. Moreover, copper money is undeniably heavy—the coin is not agreeable to handle, and it communicates an unpleasant smell. It reminds one of the old copper coinage of France, among which were to be found pieces of money two centuries old, with the legends and effigies worn off, and rude attempts at coinage, out of bell-metal, during the first Revolution.

Within the last few years, thanks to the activity of that wonderful NAPOLEON who takes care of small as well as large matters in his realm, the copper coinage has been called in, and bronze metal substituted, the size and weight of the coin being diminished one half. The size is convenient, the bronze money agreeable to handle, and the appearance is very neat. In addition, the change had not only paid for the converting the coin, but, from the reduction of weight, had realized to the French Treasury a profit of $2,500,000. In England, where the copper coinage was considerably less than what it had been in France, there would be a small amount to be called in, and, of course, a smaller sum to be realized as profit.

The bronze money now current in France is harder, more convenient, more agreeable than the old copper money. The improvement of the copper coinage, in France, caused an increased demand of 50 per cent. for the new coins. Of course, the more made, the more profit gained.

The new metal will contain ninety-five parts of copper, four parts of tin, and one part of zinc. This alloy makes a hard metal. The new coin will be lighter and thinner than the copper coin. Its intrinsic value will be about half that of the present coin. Twenty-six of the old copper pennies, or sixteen of those of 1797, will make forty-five of the new bronze pennies. If the whole of the 3,500 tons of copper money now circulating in England were called in and recoined, the Government would have a profit of $286,000—which the expected increased demand would proportionably augment. Part of the new money will be made at the Mint, but the greater part at Birmingham, by contract.

It was alleged, as an argument against introducing this bronze-money, that it would throw a difficulty in the way of introducing the decimal system into England, in favor of which a strong feeling prevails among the monetary classes there. Mr. GLADSTONE, who is against this system—chiefly, we believe, because it comes from this country—sneeringly said that "there was very little life left in the scheme of a decimal coinage." It he has a predilection for the old sterling currency of pounds, shillings, and pence, he need not be uneasy with any apprehension of its discontinuance, even if the decimal system were adopted in England. Here, we have two systems in use—one nominal, one actual. Dollars and cents are used in accounts (not invariably,) but shillings and sixpences—whether levies and fips in some States or nine-pences and four-pennies in others—hold superior sway. The nominal shilling, even, does not represent its usual value, but is twelve-and-a-half cents, for which, in ordinary payment, you disburse thirteen, as the vendor of an article at this rate always takes the odd half-cent to himself, robbing the payer to that amount, in the most bare-faced manner. The half-cent, which afforded the public some protection against this robbery, has ceased to be minted, we believe—at any rate, it never was coined in any considerable or adequate numbers. In England, on the contrary, the farthing (very nearly an equivalent for our half-cent) is coined very extensively, and, particularly in populous towns, is largely in use, chiefly among the poorer classes, who cannot afford to be cheated.

Our half-cent, by the way, is a very pretty coin—we mean the last issued. There is no English money superior to it, except, perhaps, the silver florin, value 50 cents, of which a small number is annually coined, as, "the cutting being delicate and intricate, more than usual care and time are employed to produce it, which does not suit the worshipful and grasping Company of Moneyers. The copper coinage of the East India Company is very pretty, but, to our taste, the handsomest copper coins in Europe are the single and double Kreuzers of Austria. Nothing can be sharper or more delicate than the armorial bearings—imperial crown, and shield with the double spread-eagle—upon the obverse. The English copper-money has nothing to recommend it, artistically.

Magazines for September.

We like to get the month's magazines together, in a heap, and turning from one to another, behave

"Like a child at a feast,
Who flies to one sweet and is off to the rest."

Already have we noticed our two urban periodicals, respectively edited and published by Louis A. Godey and Charles J. Peterson. Able magazines they are—well edited, largely illustrated, and immensely popular. There are other magazines, however, which claim notice also, for we are cosmopolitan.

The Knickerbocker, patriarch of this species—the editor of which is a veritable Sylvanus Urban among his comètes—has not yet reached us, and we can only lament that it generally arrives late, for

"Reluctant lags the veteran on the stage."

With the aid of a good Clara, however, it usually turns up very well, albeit not with Noyes. N. B.—This is meant as a play upon the names of the two editors of "Old Knick," and we say so, because, without such notice, the joke might be overlooked.

Harper's Magazine, this month, will have even more attention from the public than it has ever before received. It is rich in well-written and handsomely illustrated articles, (such as a graphic account of Panama, the continuation of T. Addison's Forest Story, and an account of Diamonds;) it has several racy stories and some poetry; it has its usual Monthly Record of Current Events, literary notices, Editor's Easy Chair, Foreign Bureau, and Drawer; it has three new chapters of "The Virginians," in which George Warrington succeeds to a baronetcy, and revisits Virginia, where his brother Harry, husband of little Fanny Mountain, is a member of the Legislature, sturdily supporting "Mr. Washington," and stoutly resisting British misrule; it has more than all this, but the article of the month is from the pen of Stephen A. Douglas, and bears the suggestive title of "The Dividing Line between Federal and Local Authority—Popular Sovereignty in the Territories." It occupies nearly twenty pages; discusses not only the powers and duties of the Federal Government under the Constitution, but also the rights, privileges, and immunities of the people of the Territories, as well of the States composing the Union; and asserts the broad principle "that every distinct political Community, loyal to the Constitution and the Union, is entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities of self-government in respect to their local concerns and internal policy, subject only to the Constitution of the United States."

In the Atlantic Monthly the opening article, on the Life and Works of Ary Scheffer is well written, critical, and interesting. We do not know the author's name. Neither have we been able to discover or detect the authorship of a weak, ineffective, yet ambitious story, called "My Double, and how he undid me." A few more such feeble compositions will undo the Magazine. For the rest, the report may be favorable. A tale, by Grace Greenwood, called "Zelma's Vow," though more spasmod
