(Correspondence of The Trans) Washington and the Trans) Washington August 20, 1850. Who shall be the Administration conditions for President? This is the question. Mr. Buchaners declination of the numination has been taken so literally by his office-holders, that he may be compelled to stand up to his pledge, although he will take care to secure as many delegate as possible, to wait for "something to turn up" to his advan-fage. The Great Eastern. We have a letter from London respecting the Great Eastern, enclosing the bill of far or carle at the great dinner, followed by a ball on board the mammoth steamer on the 10th inst. The Great Eastern can carry 10,000 persons, but not a tenth of that number will be on board during the first voyage to the United States infost the Directors accept an offer made by Mr. LEVES, head of the Galway and New York steamboats; to chartor her for voyage from Galway to New York and back. He would probably get a few thousand passengers. If this immense hteamboat should succeed, Mr. Leves intends building four, such vessels for the Galway and New York line. The cost of another such ship would not be more than half the amount expended on the Great Eastern: If she sail to Portland, as intended, her passengers will have some cause to object to the expense and delay of journeying thence to New York We believe that the impossibility of taking her safely, over the bar at the entrance of New York harbor is the reason why, Portland, has been the port selected.
