then arose a feeling of jealousy in the heart of Ishraacl, because of the prospect of having to share his future fortune with his infant brother. When Isaac was about three years old, on a certain feast day, while these two children were playing together, Sarah, the mother of Isaac, saw Ishmael "mocking," his infant brother, 'at which abo felt vory indignant. This word it mock?" meant to tease, or plague, or make fun of, all of which was characterized by the speaker as very mean conduct, especially when a large boy is guilty of if toward a small one, and still more so if the small one was his brother. per conduct of boys in the streets was here in-troduced by the speaker. He wished his little auditors to bear in mind the lines beginning :

the lines beginning: "Let dogs delight to bark and bite;" and yet he regarded these lines as a libel on the dog, because, who had ever seen a large dog attack a small dog? No one. The result of this "mocking," by Ishmael, was, that Sarah had insisted upon him and his mother Hagor being sont away from their home. The speaker sail he did not think that Sarah did right in this, for she had evidently seized upon this opportunity to gratify her so-cret spite. Her revenge had been too severe. Yet, in this, as God very often did with others, He used, the wicked jealousy of Sarah to carry out his own great purposes. Abraham had no

He used the wicked jealonsy of Sarah to carry out his own great purposes. Abraham had no doubt felt badly about this request of his wife, but, contrary to what Abraham might have ex-pected, God came and told him to hear and obey the words which Sarah had spoken ; and accordingly the next morning early it was that the incident occurred which was related in the text.

the incident occurred which was related in the train incident occurred which was related in the "The bottle spoken of as having been placed on Hagar's shoulder, was not a glass bottle, as ...children, might imagine, but a vessel which was in those days made for holding water, by c cutting off the legs and head of a kid or gont, and then stripping the rest of the skin off whole, and tring up the openings. When these skins became dry they were ready for use, and were employed for holding liquids, just as we use earlien and glass vessels at the present day. It was such a bag-like bottle that Abraham had placed across the shoulder-mess. The probable incidents of the first night of their journey, away from home, were here depieted with considerable skill. When they came into Beer-shobs they were lost in the woods, and presently their water was all exhausted, and they saw none to replenish thick bottle.

their bottle. Islunael was rapidly approaching the point of death for the want of water. The dreadful death from this cause, with its attendant swollen tongue, its red, protruding eyes, its yellow skin, and distended veins, was here graphically described, and it was in view of this horrid end of her child that Hagar "prayed." Then it was, that the angel of God came and called out of heaven, and said into her, "Fear not, for God hath heard the God came and called out of heaven, and said into her, "Fear not; for God hath heard the voice of the lad where he is; arise, lift up the lad, and hold him in thine hand; for I will make him a great nation." And immediately sho looked around and saw a well of water, when she went and filled her bottle, and gave the lad to drink, and he lived. "From this point in the history of Ishmael we were not told much about him until he grew up and became the father of twelve sons, who were twelve princes, and from whom it was said the Arabian nation had sprung— Arabians being characterized by the speaker as ull the children of Ishmael; in connection with which the peculiarities of that nation with which the peculiarities of that nation were refetred to as singularly in accordance with the divine decree concerning Ishmael— viz: that "his hand would be against every man, and every man's hand against him."
