A quantity of kindling wood was left in an open stove to dry, which got on fire, fell upon the floor, and communicated to the building.

The Hallan Question.

Nearly three months ago, we expressed the belief that King Locoup, of Belgium, would try his hand at settling the Italian question. A few weeks, since, that, astute statesman visited the Emperor Napoleon at Blarritz.

The result is reported, from Parls, to be an arrangement of the questio vexata of Italy.

There are various statements, all of which agive in making the Archduko Maximilians, of Austria (Locoup's son-in-law), ruler of Venetia, which is to be erected into an independent State. Tuscany to be restored to the house of Lorraine, the Grand Duke's eldest son succeeding, on his father's addication. The Cenut of Flaxmens (Locoup's second son) to govern Modens and Parniamonther rumor gives these Duchies to the King of Sardinla. The Logations to be restored to the Pope. The fortresses of Peschlera and Mantan to go with Lombardy, thereby breaking up "the elbow of the quantity in this disposition of countries and rulers, not word is said of, no consideration is given to this disposition of countries and rulers, not word is said of, no consideration is given to the size of the dissussion of the size and construction of Nosh's Ark. WASHINGTON, Oct. 10, 1859. In my letter of the 7th of September, I used the following language: "Mr. Broderick has no family, and he said himself, in one of his late speeches, that he had no blood relation on earth.' He is a man of singular integrity and intrepidity, one who has worked his way to his present high position by his own exertions, and, although constantly depre-ciated by the organs of the Administration, has displayed a degree of power and ability, especially fornia papers allege that it is proposed to shoot him down on the streets, and one authority goes so far as to intimate that the person has been Treadled his converga-tion with pleasure. He had the duest literary tastes, and was fond of the society of learn. I and intelligent men. His attachment to his friends was sincere and enthysically incere and enthusiastic beyond description. At mes he seemed overcome with melancholy. The assaults upon his private and public character—although rarely referred to by himself—were so perintaint on the part of the organs of the Administra-tion, here, in New York, and in California, that they no doubt greatly affected him. He had not a living relative; to use his own language in the Senate, "there remained no tie of blood to bind me (him) to any being in existence." He was a silent man, apt, occasionally, to indulge in the gloomy anticipations which his peculiar isolation suggested to him. He had never been married, and rarely took part in the gaicties of Washington. He was singularly neat in his attire. His rooms, next door to the Kirkwood House, on Pennsylvania avenue, were the resort of many of the most distinguished men the country, and they were always received by im with cordislity and kindness. He was a careful business man, and, but for the panie, would have been very rich. I do not know whether he died possessed of any fortune, but it is certain that he owned considerable valuable property in and about San Francisco.

It was my province to see him almost every day during the sessions of the last Congress. When he took part in conversation he displayed a good amount of information on all questions, particularly in reference to the geography and resources of the Pacific coast, and of California—to which State have a grightly attended, and for which State he was ardently attached, and for which he was ready to make any sacrifice.
