FRIDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1859. One of the most difficult modes of writing letion is in the form of Autobiography. Scorr succeeded with it in "Rob Roy." A few other novel-writers have made similar attempts, but the general result may be stated in luces a young girl, early orphaned, whom a rich uncle in the city is compelled, for very hame sake, to take care of. In his house she s treated most unkindly, as poor relations too frequently are, while his own daughters are in every respect, is a gentleman. Her cousin, leorgiana Elliott, who has failed to win him, fondly and foolishly marries an adventurer named Despender, who has nothing but dashing manners and a good wardrobe to recommend him. For this, she is repudiated by her parents, and retires with her husband to an ld stone mansion in the vicinity of the citywhich we take to be Philadelphia. Margaret Gray, who unhappily quarrels with her over on a point of womanly principle, in which she was right, is also turned out of cors by her uncle, and becomes a visitant of the Old Stone Mansion, with which great crimes are traditionally connected. What occurs there during that brief residence and in absequent shorter visits forms the mystery and romance of the story, which are power-love does at last run smooth, and Matrimony winds up the story in the most agreeable man The merit of this tale is fourfold :-- the plot sfull of interest, without being improbable; he characters are well drawn and naturally brought out; the descriptions of country cenery are actual pictures; and the occasion il remarks on society show much knowledge of the world and keen observation. Here are few reflections which are singularly applicade, though written months ago, to "diamond" marriages: "Why dous the gir A full assortment of Gity made Boots and Shoes constantly on hand.

I Why doubt the girl at eighteen give herself away to a rich than, old enough to be her father and who has nothing in common with her elegand to be her father and who has nothing in common with her elegand that the result is also that the result is and youthful enthusisem? Is it love that moves her? See how she shrinks, involuntarily, from him as he approaches. Listen to what her issue to what her issue to the farm and their actions and heritation on the eve of marriage. She is just a nuch sold, as the great satirist of our day has said, as if she had been a Circa-sian slave. Her own tamity, said the false satirist of our day has said, as if she had been a Circa-sian slave. Her own tamity and the false sent her other way to Texas, some parts of which are admirably adapted for wool-raising, and great sent her other way to Texas, some parts of which the circa-sian slave. Her own the breed of theep. Circa-sian slave. Her own that we would be a stained and the share markets of Constantinople. On: houses and lands, wealth and phantion, tashion and there would hear the work of these were fine Spanish merines. On the bank, planting the stained how many souls destrictly sell. It is because of you that marriage has easeed, in a great disperse, to be the holy scarement whether double trees, built a large fire at the entrance, and convert with large are highered, their four to the converted to the start of the start of the torse of the start of the fourth the size of the start of the you separated—how many souls actived. It is because of you that marriage has coased, in a great degree, to be the holy sacrament which dod designed it for, and has become, instead, a mere bargain and sate. And the evit consequences of such marriage do not end with this into: they reach to eternity; they perpetuate themselves, through children brought up in bickering households, through generations almost without end.

"There are many of my sex who wilt read this, and say I exaggerate. They thomselves are married. They have deliberately east off those they sived, to marry rion men who have no sympathy with them. Yet they are, they would tell me, happy. They tarely, indeed, see their husbands, who are always at the club, of the counting-house, or the office. We all know such women. They have the sleek skins the contoincles faces, the plump forms of creatures without souls, and are therefore ignorant of what happiness is. The blade in them moved cuts the scabbard. Their nusbands are like them. To such, marriage is a mere secal institution, and love only the dream of school-boys and sentimental misses. They go through no decorously, the women exponsily, no pulse ever quickening, no norve ever vibrating. Not for them is the agany of the probe, or the rapture of real sympatry. Let them vegetate with their kind. They cannot judge for me. Shall those who have heard celesian music, deny there is a heaven? Oh! there are some who, though fainting and weary outside the gates, and dooned forever to wander in exite, have yet histened, once at least, to the golden harps, and will carry with them to their graves the bites of that memory; ay, and be happier, in spite of their sorrows, than these on whom the beatthe vision never dawned!"

NEW YORK, Oct. 26, 1859.

The withdrawal of the Rev. Dr. Forbes from the Reman Catholic priesthood and church, and his redurption of relations with the Episcopal Church, casions some talk in clerical circles, but is not rearded as an even; of sufficient magnitude to throw the community entirely off its balance. I hear that for some months past he has been in communisation with a distinguished Episcopalism doctor of livinity, with a predisposition to take the steps he are taken in his letter to Archbishop Hughes. By the ennous of the General Convention of the Epis. copal church in the United States, a clergyman of that Church, once deposed, cannot again be admit-ted to its ministry; but Dr. Forbes, having been ordained in England, where a different law prevails, can, on renouncing Romanism, be again ad-nitted to the priesthood. Such, I am told, is the nitted to the priesthood. Such, I am told, is the toot. If so, and he should desire to resume ministerial labor, he can accomplish that object by going to England, there formally renouncing Reman Catholicism, resuming priestly functions, and hence be canonically transferred to any diocese in the United States. Although the modes operandicayors assembled of the circumbiguation office, the cate could thus be accomplished. I undermand Dr. 7.
