pened to Deacon Standfast Holdfast, But h titude-considering that, ou the whole, he made money, discharged his duty to the State and the congregation, and finally purchased for himself an enviable rank among the saints He set down these insults and oppositions as the buffetings of Satan, and only grew the more zealons in the execution of his office the more he was insulted and opposed.

It is true, there were some travellers who mbmitted peacefully to the arrest, and, without opposition, discharged their fines, rather than make any disturbance, or, by opposing the execution of the law, subject themselves to its further exactions. But there were certain fellows who took the liberty of travelling on a Sunday, who proved themiselves esther itoo turbulent or too cunning for the tythingman's LETTER HAGS management. Among these may be particul larly mentioned the New York Dutchmen; and the Yankee pedlars of , tin-ware and other notions. We will give an instance or two by way of illustration :

As Deacon Standfast Holdfast was sitting in is pew one winter Sunday, looking out as usual on the high road, he descried a stout-looking man, in a fur cap and gloves, with a sleigh and a pair of fue horses. The general aspect of the man and of his equipage was rather forbidding. But the devout desire of discharging his duty, and the temptation withal of making money, promptly decided the course of the tythingman. He rushed incontinently from the place of worship, seized hold of the horses' reins, and ordered the traveller, it and authoritative voice, to stop. "Shtop!" exclaimed the stranger, who was authoritative voice, to stop, "Shtop!" exclaimed the stranger, who was fresh from the Gorman flats, " wat for shall I shtop, ha?" "It's against the law here to travel on the Sabbath.

"Againsht de law ! de dyvil it is! And wat tinks you I care for de law of your tam. Yankee land, ha7 I be's one Dutchman, and goes were I pleashes on de Sunday, and all odder

"Yes, but you can't go where you please here on a Sunday. I'm the tythingman of the town."

"Well, if you be's de tireshome man of de down, get out of de way, and not drouble me." "My duty forbids-you must stop till tomorrow." "Wat! shtop till to-morrow! I tells you I will not shtop-so let go mine horses, pelore I knocks you down." Thus saying, the Dutchman began to suit the action to the word, by making ready his heavy loaded whip, when the Descon bawled out-you pleashe I don't care for all de conshtob-Dés and tiréshome mens in Connecticut." By this time the constable had got within reach of his loaded whip, when, letting drive, he laid him sprawling in a snow-bank, and giv-ing hie corra-fed horses a chirrup and a crack; they, started suddenly forward, upset the Desthey started suddenly forward, upset the Des-con, passed glibly over his body, and went con, passed glibly over his body, and went away with a speed that all the tythingmen and constables in the State, had they been sound in wind; limb, and courage, could not have arrested.

The catastrophe was noticed from the church, and half the congregation poured forth the into the Deacon's house, where the constable, being more seriously. ftightened than hurt, pretty soon recovered. But the Deacon is and windry weile.

The tythingman stood aghast, and the ped-lar drove on, very well satisfied with the result of his arrest, by which, he declared, after deducting the expense of his fine, he had cleared thirteen shillings and sixpence, Yankoe cur-rency, considering the extra quantity of pro-visions that he and his horse had so bountitully stowed away.
