The Hitchurg papers have recently published a correspondence between a number of the leading Republicans in the county and the Hon. Thingam M. John Brown's Early History.—A correspondent of the Hartford Press says that John Brown's grandfather was a captain in the Revolubudy army, and of the fourth generation, in regular descent, from Peter Brown, one of the Pilgrim Fathers, who landed from the Mayflower. Of John Brown himself he says:

"At the age of eighteen or twenty, the present Capt John Brown left Hudson, Ohio, and came east with the design of acquiring a liberal education through some of our New England colleges. His ultimate design was the Gospel ministry. In pursuance of this object, he consulted and conferred with Rev. Jeremiah "Hallock, then clergyman at Canton, Conn., whose wife was a relative,) and in accordance with advice there obtained, proceeded to Plainfold, Mass, where, under the instruction of Rev. Moses Hallock, (father of the present sonlor editor of the Journal of Commerce) fitted for college. While there pursuing his studies, he was attacked with inflammation of the eyes, which ultimately became chronic, and precluded him from the possibility of the further pursuit of his studies, when he returned to Ohio. Had not this inflammation supervened, John Brown would not have died a Virginia callows, but in all probability would have died on a feather bod, with D. D. affixed to his name Whether in the last supposed case the world would have been gainers, or losers, I leave for the world to deelde!

The town of Ossawatomic was settled by emigrants principally from Ohio, a large portion of whom were three or four sons, nephews, nieces, and one sister, the wife of the Rev. Mr. Adair; a missionary located at Ossawatomic These, when the danger of being wiped on the Prosessavory ruffians became imminent, urgently appealed to their former friends and so quantances for aid and assistance.
