MEDICINAL.

MRS. WINSLOW,
AN EXPERIENCED NURSE AND FEMALE Physician, presents to the attention of mothers her
SOOTHING SYRUP
FOR CHILDREN TEETHING, which greatly facilitates the process of teething, by softening the gums, reducing all inflammation; will allay ALL PAIN and spasmodic action, and is SURE TO REGULATE THE BOWELS.
Depend upon it, mothers, it will give rest to yourselves and
RELIEF AND HEALTH TO YOUR INFANTS.
We have put up and sold, years and can say, in confidence and truth of it, what we have never been able to say of any other medicine, NEVER HAS ONE FAILED, in a SINGLE INSTANCE, TO EFFECT A CURE, when timely used. Never did we witness an instance of dissatisfaction by any contrary, all are delighted to speak in terms of highest commendation of its magical effects and medical virtues. We speak in this matter "what we do know," after ten years' experience, and pleasure in the statement of what we have done, that after the first instance where the infant is suffering from pain and exhausting, relief will follow within twenty minutes after the Syrup is administered.
This invaluable preparation is the most EXPERIENCED NURSES in New England, and has been used with never-failing success in THOUSANDS OF CASES,
It not only relieves the child from pain, but invigorates the stomach and bowels, corrects acidity, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. It will almost instantly relieve GRIPING IN THE BOWELS AND WIND COLIC, and overcome convulsions, which, if not speedily remedied, is fatal to death. We believe it the best and surest remedy in the world, in all cases of DYSENTERY AND DIARRHŒA IN CHILDREN, whether it arises from teething or from any other cause. We would say to every mother who has a child suffering from any of the foregoing complaints, do not let your prejudices, nor the prejudices of others, stand between your suffering child and the relief that will be BY SURE—to follow the use of this medicine. Full directions accompany each bottle. None genuine unless the fac-simile of CURTIS & PERKINS, New York, is on the outside wrapper.
☞ Sold by Druggists throughout the world. Principal Office, No. 13 CEDAR Street, New York. 19-y

MORE PROOF OF THE WONDERFUL EFFECTS OF MONELL'S AMERICAN HAIR REPARATOR.
PHILADELPHIA, September 27th, 1859.
This is to certify that I was bald for many years, and was recommended to try your Reparator; and having procured three bottles, used it for three months, which has caused my hair to grow, and although not quite as thick as before, yet it is considerably improved.
E. M. JONES,
No. 39 North Third street.

PHILADELPHIA, September 27th, 1859.
MR. J. F. MONELL, Dear Sir—Some time since my hair commenced falling out, so much so, that I was, in fact, fearful of becoming bald; but hearing of the wonderful power of your Reparator, I was induced to buy a bottle, and after using one-half of it my hair not only ceased coming out, but commenced growing finely, and I have now as thick a suit of hair as ever I had.

SILVER WARE.
WM. WILSON & SON
Invite special attention to their stock of SILVER WARE, which is now unusually large, affording a variety of pattern and design unsurpassed by any house the United States, and of finer quality than is manufactured for table use in any part of the world.
Our Standard of Silver is 925-1000 parts pure.
The English Sterling.....925-1000 "
American and French.....900-1000 "
Thus it will be seen that we give thirty-five parts purer than the American and French coin, and ten parts purer than the English Sterling. We melt all our own Silver, and we guarantee the quality as above (925), which is the finest that can be made to be serviceable, and will resist the action of acids much better than the ordinary Silver manufactured.

The Press.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 18, 1860

Lord Macaulay.

Literature has sustained a heavy loss by the death of Lord Macaulay. Less fortunate than Gibbon, who lived for several years after the completion of his great historical work, Macaulay has departed with the crowning labor of his life incompleted. He has left two volumes nearly ready for the press, which, no doubt, will be speedily published. The four volumes which have already appeared cover only ten years of British history, namely from 1687 to the close of 1697, when the power of William of Orange was firmly established. The two volumes to come will extend, we believe, to the close of Queen Anne's reign—the period when Lord Mahon's History of England commences. Macaulay's fault was taking too large a canvas. Had he commenced writing his History ten years before he died—say on his return from India—he still would have been unable to have completed it. What he has produced is brilliant, picturesque, and not a little prejudiced. He has made almost a personal quarrel with Penn and Marlborough, and his estimate of that cold-blood Dutchman, William the Third, errs on the other extreme, in being entirely too favorable.

The public may desire to know what manner of man Macaulay was. Twenty-five years ago he was one of the worst-looking men in the House of Commons. Stature rather below the middle height; figure bulky and ungraceful; features fleshy, sallow, and inexpressive; rough hair of a sandy hue; mouth firm and well cut; large and remarkably lustrous eyes; attire extremely careless. Such was Macaulay at the age of thirty-five. His face lighted up when he spoke—particularly when making one of his Parliamentary orations, which, however, had the fault (almost unpardonable by an English audience) of being carefully prepared before hand, and committed to memory. His voice was between a lisp and a burr, and his utterance was thick and husky for the first five minutes of delivery. After that, his voice sounded grandly and clearly, and a pin could be heard in the House of Commons while he was speaking.

Macaulay's personal appearance greatly improved with advancing years. He became slighter in his figure—less pudgy, in fact; the deepened lines of his face, marked by thought, added expression to it; his sand-colored hair became nearly white. By far the best portrait of Macaulay—the only one which represents him as he really looked in his later years—was published last year, in the London Illustrated News of the World, with an accurate memoir. This portrait was engraved on steel, by Mr. D. J. Pound, from a photograph by Mault & Polybank, and was probably the last for which Lord Macaulay sat. This portrait also appears with the biography, in the second series of the "Drawing Room Portrait Gallery of Eminent Personages," of which Messrs. Henry A. Brown & Co., of Boston, are the American publishers.

The memoir in question, corrected, we believe, by Lord Macaulay himself, says that he was born at Rothley Temple, in Leicestershire, on the 25th October, 1800. His public career has been extremely fortunate. He entered Parliament, at the age of 30, when only a briefless barrister, on the strength of his reputation as a writer in the Edinburgh Review, owing his seat to the Marquis of Lansdowne, a liberal of the first water, who, when his Whig colleagues framed the Reform Bill in 1832, took good care to preserve one member for the petty borough of Calne, his private property—thus this village with 104 electors returning one member, while Salford, with 4,000 electors and 107,000 population, has only one also. Macaulay has held numerous offices—viz: Commissioner of Bankrupts, Secretary to the India Board, Member of the Supreme Council in India, (where he had $50,000 a year for four years,) Secretary at War, and Paymaster-General of the Forces. In September, 1857, he was placed in the House of Lords, with the title of Baron Macaulay, but rarely attended, and, as far as we recollect, did not once make a speech, as a Peer.

At the request of several, who have been desirous of procuring a copy of the article in THE PRESS, on September 16, 1857, on hearing of Macaulay's elevation to the Peerage, we take leave to reproduce it here:

Thomas Babington Macaulay elevated to the British peerage, without the adventitious aids of connection, family, or wealth! The man who, five and twenty years ago, would have prophesied that the most ultra Radical in Lord Grey's Administration—the man who, while the Reform Bill was in agitation, fiercely challenged the propriety of having such an estate of the Realm as the House of Lords; that Macaulay should himself become a peer, would have been very greatly ridiculed. His elevation may be accepted as a compliment to literature—the greatest yet paid in England, for Macaulay is the first man of letters placed in the Upper House. Scott, Bulwer, and Alison received the inferior honor of baronetcy, and Sir Humphrey Davy, the great chemist and natural philosopher, had only the temporary honor of knighthood. Macaulay is made an hereditary legislator, and Palmerston, who wants efficient aid in the Lords, probably calculates upon occasional help from the new Baron.

On the 19th of January, 1856, Macaulay relinquished the Parliamentary Representation of Edinburgh, on the plea of bad health, and bade farewell to political life. It was expected that he would devote the comparative leisure thus obtained to the prosecution of his historic studies. Considering that in the four volumes already published, (containing nearly 2,000 octavo pages,) he has given us only nine years of English history—that seven years intervened between the publication of the two portions of the work, that his purpose was to write the annals of a hundred and thirty years, and that, with a broken constitution, Macaulay has already passed the age of fifty-seven, there can be no reasonable ground for an expectation that his work will ever be completed. He committed a great fault at the very commencement, by taking too large a canvas for his picture. His work, brilliant as it is in parts, will be a monument no less of his industry than his genius, but it runs too much into details; the breadth of the narrative is sacrificed by the relation of the minute particulars. The result must be—we shall have a literary torso, grand and noble, indeed, but yet imperfect. To complete Macaulay's work, on a scale proportionate with what is already published, would take at least thirty volumes. His only chance is to contract his design and close his history at the end of Queen Anne's reign and the accession of the House of Brunswick. Even this would require at least half a dozen volumes more, and more constant application than Macaulay is able to devote to it.

Wherever the English language is spoken, the name of Macaulay is familiar. We shall scarcely err in sketching his political career, up to the present period, when he may be induced again to enter into the arena of politics and partisanship.

Macaulay, born at Rothley Temple, in Leicestershire, in 1800, was educated in Devonshire, and freely made use of his knowledge of West of England localities, when relating the incidents of Monmouth's bootless campaign and Jeffries' "blood assize." He entered the University of Cambridge at the age of 18, was elected (on competition) to the Craven scholarship three years later, graduated as Bachelor of Arts in 1822, and in the same year was made Fellow of Trinity College—a literary sinecure, yielding some £200 per annum, which he held until his appointment to India in 1834. At Cambridge, as at Oxford, there is a debating club called The Union. Macaulay became a member, and soon was considered as by far the most eloquent of all who took part in the discussions. He was so strongly Democratic in his tendencies at that time, that he was compelled, in later years, formally to contradict a rumor, which had become embodied into a reproach and accusation, to the effect that, while in College, on the anniversary of the execution of Charles the First, he had significantly intimated his antipathy to Kingship, by inviting his friends to a supper, the principal dish of which was a calf's head.

While at Cambridge, between the years 1822 and 1824, Macaulay contributed largely, in prose and verse, to The Etonian and Knight's Quarterly Magazine—short-lived but brilliant periodicals which are now so eagerly sought for that almost any price can be obtained for complete sets. The ballads called "The Song of the League," "The Battle of Ivry," and the "Lays of the Cavaliers," (scarcely known in this country,) appeared in Knight's Quarterly.

In 1826, Macaulay became a barrister, at Lincoln's Inn, (he was elected Bencher of that society in 1819, on account of his literary merit,) and soon after, was made Commissioner of Bankrupts, an office then worth about £300 a year. Early in 1827, having then settled in London, and got into the liberal and literary society of Holland House, he contributed his first article, "On English Politics in 1827," to the Edinburgh Review. The paper on Milton followed, and the remainder of the brilliant series which he has since published together in a collective form.

It was soon perceived, that as a lawyer Macaulay had little inclination to "live laborious days." He was strongly urged to bestow himself upon politics. Zachary Macaulay, his father, who was one of the leaders of the English Anti-Slavery movement, was largely mixed up with the liberal party. The future historian's own feelings were liberal also. The influence of Holland House was great, and early in 1830, the pocket-borough of Calne, (the property of the Whig Marquis of Lansdowne,) had the honor of returning Mr. Macaulay as one of its representatives. For that borough he sat until December, 1832, when the Reform Bill came into operation. The newly-enfranchised borough of Leeds then elected him, and he continued its representative until February, 1834, when he went to India. He sat for Edinburgh from May, 1839, to the autumn of 1847, (when he was cashiered, by the Anti-Catholic electors, for voting for the further endowment of Maynooth,) and was again elected in July, 1852, without any solicitation on his part, without his even issuing an address to the voters. Over seven-and-twenty years have passed since Macaulay entered Parliament, but he has had a seat in the Commons for little more than half that period.

From the very first, he took a leading and striking part in the debates and succeeded in becoming a popular speaker, although he labored under many personal disadvantages. His delivery was as rapid as Sheil's; his voice shrill, and monotonous; and he so much lacked the power of the ready creativeness, which is half the battle in a debate, that his speeches "smelt of the lamp" very much, and, in fact, were cut-and-dried essays, carefully elaborated beforehand, and committed to memory. In this, he resembled another man of genius—Mr. Sheil—and few Parliamentary speakers of any note followed their example. The House of Commons, which generally objects to prepared orations, was singularly tolerant toward Macaulay and Sheil. But it cannot be doubted that extempore addresses from these politicians, however inferior to their carefully-composed speeches, would have had more weight, by a great deal. The Hours listened to them, applauded, thronged to hear them; the public eagerly and admiringly perused the newspaper reports of their brilliant speeches—they flashing in the midst of the debates; but a plain, ready, practical speech, emanating on the moment from almost any other member who had the ear of the House, would have more service than the brilliant rhetoric of Macaulay and Sheil.

Some months after he entered Parliament there was a change of Ministry. Wellington retired and Grey came in, pledged to Parliamentary Reform. Macaulay, though he had made only one speech, and that a brief one, (in favor of removing the civil disabilities of the Jews,) was considered of so much promise that the Reform Ministry made him Joint Secretary of the India Board. This recognition gave him official status, n
