The Union Festivals in Louisville, Cincinnati, and Columbus. towns, ample expression has been given to the Union sentiment which is deeply onshrined in the hearts of all true American citizens, the people of four of the great Western and Southmost significant and unmistakable manner, the

and Cincinnati, and various points along the route, participated in by the Governors, members of the Legislatures, mayors of the leading cities, or other distinguished official repreentatives of the four great States named above, a sufficient number of speeches expressive of a warm attachment to the Union, to fill a largeest exhibitions: of enthusiasm, by audiences numbering many thousands.

Occasional blekerings will inevitably occur in the best-regulated families, and while a wide and unrestricted latitude of political thought and action is not only tolerated but auticipated , and encouraged in this country, we can scarce ly desire, and certainly not expect, to be always free from threatening political convulsions but, despite all these storms, the American Union, and the heartfelt desire of the American people to perpetuate it, remain as clearly defined and as indestructible as a rockbound coast against which the angry waves of the ocean expend their wildest fury. ...

These recent demonstrations have all been distinguished by the fervor and earnest sincerity which characterizes the people of the West in all their movements-whether social, industrial, or political-and they have been particularly significant on account of the important official position of the men prominently enguged in them, the list including Democratic Governors of free and slave States, a Republican Governor and ex-Governor of Ohio, and a large number of members of free and slaveholding Legislatures.

Italian Opera.
It is rather doubtful, we learn, whether the Ullman and Strakosch opera frouve will return to our Academy of Music in February, as was expected. Their success at Boston was great deal greater than they anticipated, and COLSON, ADELINA PATTI, BRIGNOLI, JUNCA FERRI, STIGELLI, and Auopio never sang and played to more enthusiastic houses. To show low great was the success, we shall here men tion a fact related to us by a friend who visited Boston the week before last. On Friday evening, January 20th, there was a crowded house at the opera. The next day there was a matinie, equally well attended, and on the following day (Sunday) the very fullest house of the season witnessed the performance of a Sa cred Concert. This, in placed and serious Boston, where there has long been an object tion to even theatrical performances on the eve of the Sabbath, must be taken as an event The whole amount received on these three occasions exceeded $5,000. The same company begin the operatic sea son at New York this week. The benefit of Signoring Parry at Roston, was to have take place last night, and an overflow was expected PATTI, who made such a favorable impressio here, has considerably onlarged her repertoirs She is considered to have achieved her greatost triumph in the part of Elvira, in the "Puritani." The Boston Journal, a good critical authority, speaks of Parri and her perform-if it may be considered something of an achievement for one so young, and comparatively unknown to draw ten of the largest audiences ever assembled in the opera house in one season; and this verdict of public appreciation corroborates and sustains that of the critic. Patti's success on this occasion was beyond all anticipation. As an actress and vocalist, nothing desirable was left undone by her. In the rolle of Elvira, Basic accomplished one of her greatest triumphs, and we can recall in none of her successors an approach to the success Patti achieved Young and petite, she has just the physique to represent the character; heroid lies a great portion of the success of Patti. Nothing can exceed the artiers and innocent simplicity of her acting in the betrothat-scene. It was nature exemplified by an intuitive and sympathetic understanding of the excellors required—an adoption of the joya and anxiety of the person represented. We shall not quickly forget the joyous murmuring of the seng. "Non Vergin Vezzan," in the first act, or the vivid picture of a mind beref: of reason which the clim's of that act presented." " It may be considered something of an achieve

This success, we suspect, will prevent PATTI's visit to Europe as early as was in tended. No doubt, our opera-goers in this city would be glad to have a second visit from the Opera troupe. But the managers of that Company have strong, and by no means strange, objections to the best seats in the Academy being always reserved for Stockholders, from whom they (the Managers) receive no admission-money, while, they allege, there is not a corresponding reduction in the rental, as an equivalent. We know that this objection is strongly felt-so strongly that, while grounds for it continue to exist, the return of the Ullman and Strakosch troupe may be considered doubtful.

in "The Hunchback." We have rarely seen this play so well performed. Mr. Wheatley is, beyond son, the best Sir Thomas Clifford on the stage. Not much of a part-resting, almost entirely, with the action to fill it up. Mr. Gilbert taking a new idea of the character of Maste Walter, giving it a domestic and natural air which, to our taste, is Sheridan Knowles' actua imagining of the part. Mr. Dolman, as Modus very able to his rendition. And, then, Mrs. John Drew's Helen-the most womanly, delicate, delicious (that's the word), and natural of all Heleni Why do we mention these before we name Mis Coombs? Simply because they played better, each and all, then she did. This lady has youth, good looks, graceful action, and a charming figure but—that ornel but—her intonation is very bad. She gases after every third word. Thus, "I cal you Clifford and you call me Madam." she speak thus, "I-sh call you sh Clifford ah, and you sh call most Mademan." This is a terrible defect—the result of bad habit, and we are free to acknowledge that, if she play on forinight at this theatre, and be taught by the por-formers there, she will leave Philadelphia a much At present, she is, most unfortunately, full of man prisms. She has great dramatic capabilities, and we suspect that she has been spoiled in the West, where the ranting of Miss Fanny Pets Farren secrepted as something a trifle better than Sidde nian genius.
