In 1803, Congress vested all powors in a Gover-nor and thirteen counsellors—not councillors elect-ed by the people. Where, then, ho asked, was popular solveright? For fifty years the Fede-ral Government was invested with the supreme control of the Territories. In 1804, Louisiana was divided into two Territories, and the Governor of Indiana and judges wore authorized to make laws for the upper division. To talk of popular isoversignity in regard to the people of Territories, iwas to deprive language of its meaning. This law of 1804, approved by Jefferson—whom the Re-publicans claimed as their political father—prohi-bited the introduction of slaves except by persons alisens of the United States, who went in for the purpose of settling. This law is in force to this day, except where it has been abrogated by State ensurnement. It gave protection to slave property in the Territories, when owned by cliizens. Now, the political platforms proposed to protect every-body, Dutoh or Jrish, everywhere, but could not protect the cliizens of our country in their own Territories. The next acquisition was that of New Mexico and California, and, by treaty. Congress bound the Government to protect these Territories in the same way as it did Louislans.
