Taking up his needed inea,
Mr. Douile says: "My dear,
There is not a sipel builton
On this shirt I'm holding here!"
And his wife reblies: "My darling,
You'll be quiet, if you please;
I've been thinking, not of shirts, love;
But about the Japanese. "You must do without the buttons;"
"You must do without the buttons;"
"You must do without the buttons;"
"You was you fittle man?"
"You was you want the man?"
"Yith some trinimlass from Japan;
"Witho, on aky unfushed dresses,
I must put this very day;
For I will outshine the Stuckups,
In the mansion o'or the wey."
I will do without the buttons."
Danie says. with acconts sweet;
But though buttonies and hopeless.
"Yill the sons of Nahon greet,
"And, while you outshine the Stuckups,
May your feeling snet be tur."
By their seeing sne-your husband—
With no buttons on my shirt."
Let there comes a thought to Dooile—

Lo! there comes a thought to Dooile-Just the very thought he needs... And, with feelings it awatens, To the Tower Hall he speads; Where he buys a change of linen,
With some garments a la mode;
And exclaims: "I hope the butto
On this shirt are strongly sewed! For if this—I sigh to say it!— Should of buttons be bereft. I must hid farewell to buttons. Till the Japanese have left."

New York: Charles Softbner. [These memorials of a good and gifted man, who has only lately departed to the better land, are of great value. They show the growth of his mind; they give his opinions upon men, books, and public events; they trace the origin and progress of his re versity, they trace the origin and progress of his re-ligious faith; and they present a photograph, so to speak, of his life in thought and action. His letters from Europe, fresh and sometimes even balliant, are full of sound sense, and exhibit the ofeseness of his observation and the great extent of his general acquaintance with polite literature Everywhere, too, his Ohristian feeling is evident in these letters. There is a copius index to each volume, and two portraits of Dr. Alexander are given. The notes by Dr. Hall elucidate

Gen. Will A. Stokes, of Westmoreland, was now loudly called for, and the chairman introduced him to the meeting, which he addressed as follows:

When I last had the pleasure of addressing you, now nearly four years since, we were engaged in a most arduous contest—in the election of James Buchanan as President of the United States. Our contest was crowned with success—a disastrous success. The fruits are before us, fruits like the apples of the Dead Sea, pleasing to the eye, but ashes to the fouch, and you are here to night as the evidences. There is something wrong—something to be gootlied. What is it? Congress, as the Republicans claimed, had the right to interfere with the question of slavery in the Territories. The Democratic party denied it, and said the people of the Territories alone had the right to make the laws under which they live. The contest was secessful op that doctrine, and you are here to night to resilling it. You are where you then were. Where is Mr. Bundanan? Is he with us or against us? It is not enough to say that he is the successful candidate of the Democratic party, or the President of the United States. We wish to know how he stands on the great issue upon which he was elected. I say, where is he to dev? I am
