FRIDAY JUNE 22, 1860. A Historie Paralleli British politics in the Last braider and alie-rican politics at this till 2.

It has been blogantly and profoundly assorted; that history is anhitteephy teaching by example. And certainly syemts similar in impur; and all most identical in the leading droumstences with which they stand associated, have been continually ccurring since civilization and government were first known among men by which the same salu-tary lessons of practical instruction seem to have tary 'tersons or practical instruction seem to have been more or less foreibly inculcated; though it must be confessed that 'a strange and deplotable tegardisament of the driver in manifested among those engaged in the idministration of governmental affairs. It is in this view of the shipset that with the feels a sincere solution of the this with the feels a sincere solutions of the this with the feels a sincere solutions of the this with the feels a sincere solutions.

It is in this view of the subject that this the feels a sincere solbsitude of the subject that the two feels a sincere solbsitude of the subject that the feels a sincere solbsitude of the subject that the feels and uncertain condition of public affairs, the gents, ral spread of corruption, the tesselves jarring of discordant opinions, the prevalence of dark and dangerons dogmas in high deliberative assemblies, the amprofitable wrangings of dreamy political abstractionists, the extraordinary forestall accepts outclempt exhibited by public incord on the world for the vital principles upon which free institutions have been established among us—presumes to invite the attention of his countryinen to certain historic scenes, which had their progress in England a litting more titled and historic scenes, which had their progress in England a litting more titled and historic scenes, which had their progress in England a litting more titled and manifest in current land were in a state of great confusion.—Domostic discord was widely prevalent. The foreign relations of the English dovernment were in a very disturbed and measurant of the tention of the confusion.—Tomostic discord was widely prevalent. The foreign relations of the English dovernment were in a very disturbed and massilafactory condition. The state of political parties was peculiar, and not a little inauspicious to the public repose. The Tory party, one apported the public repose. The Tory party, one apported into the demand of the content leaders, the curious spostacy or torpid innotion of others; and had been for a more of its ancient leaders, the curious spostacy or torpid innotion of others; and had been for a success of the weight of governmental oppression, that it had both end for the public repose of the public repose of the public repose of the party had been for some years in power, but it had evidently lost much of its torner prestige. Instead by a long and cuabro in order to control as far as possible the election of members to the House of Commons, and, in this way, eventually to place both houses of the National Logislature under what is so well known in England as the reflected of the Crown. Could this project have succeeded, it is obvious that the Government of England, by the virtual concentration of all political power in the Executive Department, must infallibly have become one of the most through-paced despotisms that the world has over known, and English freedom would, in that case, have owed its subversion to the use of just such means as have been more than once employed, in different ages and countries, for the attainment of this monstrous end. Liberty too, as has so often happened, would have fallen a victim to the treachery of its own projected. It must be confessed that there was something particularly daring in this double scheme of temperature of Partument; since these have ever been looked upon in England as the two strongest bulwarks of civil freedom. I repeat, that there was something particularly doring in this project, since 'tis well known rheadews' repeat that there was something particularly doring in this project, since 'tis well known rheadews' repeat, that there was something particularly doring in this project, since 'tis well known themselves so jealous of everything like executive interference, with cither of the great safeguards referred to, that the ill fated monarch just mentioned notorlously owed his dolutrenement and subsequent death mainly to his attempt to control the return of members to the House of Commons, by special mandates to the shoriffs throughout the realm, directing them to make return of none but the known friends of the King and his particular schemes of policy, and that not a single reign has subsequently occurred, in the progress of which now enactments have not been adopted in Parliament, for the purpose of shielding these rights still more effectually against seconity stack.

ficient to enable it to undergo those severeremedles which it had become needful to apply, and he felt assured that a speedy return to first principles would prove the most effectual expedient which could then be resorted to. His, plan was, therefore, first to purity theroughly the Whig party itself, to restore its ancient creed, and to get rid of Walpole and his baleful crew as soon struggle which now enseed. Herce was the conflict in which Folteney and his renowned compeers had now to enlist. Through many a stormy scene of fierde partiamentary altereation had they to Late despatches from Palerme report no change in the position of sizers. The capitulation had not been sighed, and nothing, positive was known as to the armistice. Addording to some despatches it was prolonged indefinitely, while others state it was to terminate on the 7th or 12th instant. Garifield had, constituted a Ministry, and had, sppointed a Gerernor of Palermo and of the province. He shad likewise ordered, an extraordinary levy, and had issued many decrees for energetically earrying on the war. One of Garibaldia, proclamations threates with heavy punishments those who should commit these ar assaminations.

A Paris telegram says it was believed that hestilities would not, be resumed at Palermo. The authorities were engaged in devising means for prevening the further effusion of blood. It was on the 30th of May that Garisaldi went on board the liannibal British man-of-war, to meet the Neapolitan delegate charged to demand an armistich. The conditions were: First, The retention of their respective fusitions by both parties. Second, Liberty to attend to the wounded, and to remove them on board the feet. Third, Permission to supply provisions to the hospital for the poor. Kourin, Washington, June 21. The following is the bill to secure homesteads to citial settlers on the public domain, and for other directs, which passed both Hottses of Congress on Congress o Best enacted by the Senate and House of Re-resentatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That any person who is the head of a family, and a officer of the United States, shall, from and senated the United
