A Little Song.

BY THE BARD OF TOWER HALL.

There's a litte Mr. Little, and a little wife has he. With a little heart that's come As a little wife a should be.

With a little heart that is constant,
As a little wier's should be,
By a little wier's should be,
By a little wier should be,
By a little sort man fair,
And they have a little little,
In a little sort of Littles,
With their little pare of Littles,
With their little pare of Littles,
With their little pare of Littles,
With the little pare of Littles,
White a little ark of joy,
Short his little wife and Little Bwent! I may be little some:
"Have below the little some:
"Have below the little some:
"Have held with little mixing,
Of the world be lit le snows;
By the world be little sows.
At the Tower 'I all with little
Ready ovel, the little saments,
For as little as we can:
Little's wife le chare.
That he cays but little profit
On the little saments,
With me little large little,
In little sure he war.
With me little bulls assame him
On is little farme he stands
Bu indabted for his little.
To be sow it little farme.

And, at least, that busy Little is a little beiter man.
Than an idle little souled one, On a little bugger plan.

We've but little time to labor for in our little spheres below;
And if little our deservings,
Little joy in heaven we it know

May we all, the big and little,
Keep this little fact in view.

As we, here, can do but little,
We should all that little do.

Fashionable Watering Places. Whatever may be the custom in other countries, life at a watering-place in England principally consists of what may be called the abandon of retirement. A determination to recuit health of mind or body, when enervated and fatigued by the whirl of "dissipation;" a placing of wealth and station into the shade

Of course at Brighton-which is only Lonis adopted. There, as at a few other places, which in extent, population, and institutions, are actually cities, is attempted what is called "fashionable life," but really is only its very dim daguerrootype. A feeble effort, for the nost part-ice-cream with the chill removed the shadow of a shade—an imitation badly cappy in possession of medicinal waters—a eculiar mode of living may be noticed. A family, noble, or wealthy, or fashionable—for neither riches nor rank necessarily bring their delphia, and Rev. Phillips Brooks, rector of the possessions within the charmed circle of Fash-Church of the Advent, both came to Philadelphia on, as a Duchess or a millionaire may not be of the hant ton-having spent "the season" in London, gladly turns to the hygean retirement of Matlock or Malvern. From the hour of their arrival, it would appear as if their sole desire— The world forgetting, by the world forget, were to pass as many hour in the open air as the too capricious climate will permit; to take the planest food, for which constant exercise gives a hearty relish; to live, in short, like rational beings, as if such things as the Queen's ball, the Italian opera, French plays, Almacks, solemn dinners, gay dances, and midnight fligistions were no more than visions of Fancy, each "an unsubstantial pageant faded." When such early hours and healthy occupation become habitual and pleasant, little thought is given to personal adornment. Open air and exercise are the finest Kalydors in the world-equalled only by "the magical May dew." which Hibernian eauties look for, and sometimes find. Silks, atins, and velvets, and the yet more delicate issues-sometimes so fine as almost to realize

In the fashionable summer resorts of Con. inental Europe the mode of living is of a hytion of fresh air, and no shrinking from any nent, or even great pedestrian feats. But practice,"-and a constant and tempting excitement of play, regularly recognized, and the ruling institutions of the place. Some people have gravely doubted whether such a node of life, pursued for even such a brief sensit or injury to the mental and bodily health of young people of both sexes. We have no doubt whatever on the subject. Here, in America, it is said "fashionable" take a deeper plunge into the feverish pursuit of what is called " Pleasure." Wardrobes and society are only transferred, in such cases, to new localities. People gregariously congrebeen accustomed to do at home. They luxucyphers in the crowd. Professing to be exhausted by the exactions of Society, they plunge, as if in despair, with double industry, If not with double zest, into a concentration of the same pseudo-enjoyment. In fine, because it is " the fashion," they surrender independence of natural action, and submit to many return home capable of boasting to such of their friends as may not have indulged in a like exthat was, and how delightfully crushed they were through the route and round of such summer-abodes. That such persistence in what Society calls "enjoyment" often pales the check, dims the eye, thins the face, wastes the body, and enervates the mind, is exactly what is not thought of. o know that Philadelphia differs in very many points from other great cities in the Union as mity and capital, Atlantic City has been duly change their dresses five times a day; nor is a gentlewoman who covers herself with ornations display. MOVEMENT IN BRUALF OF THE JEWS .- At a meet ing held in the early part of the present year at orusalem, to take into consideration the duty devolving upon the friends of Israel in reference to their present condition and future prospects, the following preamble, together with the eketch of a provisional organization of a society entitled the 'Abrahamle League for the restoration of Istari,' was formally adopted, as we learn from the Millennial Harbinger:

"Assured that the time has at last arrived, in the good Providence of the Lord, when special and attenuous efforts should be put forth for ameliorating the condition of the flost sheep of the flouse of Israel," in reference to their social position, as well as their spiritual wante; and persuaded, moreover, that nothing is required in order to secure the co-operation of all the humans and patriotic, as well as the plous of all nations, in behalf of this noble though much injured race, but the diffusion of information relative to the present condition and future prospects of Jades and the Jews, in connection with some suitable organization, through which tissues—sometimes so fine as almost to realize the poetical thought which robed Aphrodite in "woven air"—are left behind. The plainest muslins are placed on duty and in use. A sun-bonnet, a broad-brimmed, leghorn, a spicy hat, or a "drawn" silk, becomes the acceptable substitute for an exquisite lead-dress by Caradan, or any other fashionable modiste. A Duke's daughter, in such circumstances, will be appareled more plainly than her own femme dechambre. Ease, comfort, and the feeling that, for the time, the gay trappings of society are to be dispensed with, become very drawing, are as available in a cottage as in a palace. The goodly nature around them becomes voiceful to their hearts. Society need not be wholly abandoned in this retirement from its noisy crowds. Now and then, acquaintunces and friends will flit across the horizon; lovers will come at times, it may be; and, above all, to a whole family thus assembled, breaking the bonds of custom and ctiquette, how welcome is the domesticity which such a re-union creates.
