A letter from Denver, dated June 7, which we saw yesterday, says:

"Everything buoyant and life-like at Denver, and the mines—glowing reports coming in daily—1,000 per diem, or one thousand teams arriving weekly—tide of emigration fully set in—property running up—many freighters coming in—all bustle and business—one hundred and thirty mills here and on the wey, four to eix stamps only each.) Mines turning out richly, surpassing the mines of California, which will be soon demonstrated to the world. Emigrants are also coming in from Salt Lake and Now Mexico. Money or mills will place any man in the way to large fortune. One house alone will receive this season 25,000 sacks four, taking 500 teams to transport, costing at St. Louis $100,000—freight $230,000—this is Major Bradford's. One hundred and fifty thousand people are one mute and there, and if fifty thousand only remain during the winter, they will want 75,000 sacks flour before it can come in the spring. We have at Denver eix thousand peoplation, augmenting five hundred per week—will have fifteen thousand stationary in ninety days. Two banks now ready here—one to assay dust. It is said this was the policy recommended by the Administration, and he thought other delegates could be induced to pursue the same policy, as Douglas must be headed off by some ments or other. About this time, Mr. Gilmer was asked if he know where he was, and what delegation from Georgia he was among. He seemed amozed, but adroilly waived the point and soon retired. The Nationals had a good laugh at Gilmer's expense. A somewhat analogous case occurred with this writer the evening before. He got into the room of the Wood delegation, when he thought he was in the room occupied by the Nationals from New York. He tasted the graps, so profusely offered, talked about National Democracy, and did not find out his mistake until one of the delegates told him that Howell Cobb had strived, and would soon be up in their room to consult as to the best policy to head off Douglas."
