Several papers were found on his person, which led to the suppo-sition that he was a resident of Frankford, in this city. His friends in that place saw the notice in the daily papers, and yesterday vi-sited the hospital for the purpose of identifying his remains. His name was Robert Livrey. He had recently been engaged as foreman of Briggs' printing establishment, in Frankford, and having been unwell for some time, left on Friday for Cape May, for the benefit of his bealth. He was a merited man, thirty-five years of age, and leaves a wife and child. When Mrs. Livrey ar-rived at the bagital, yesterday, and produeds a figuerrectype of her hasband, she did not know that had died. His remains had been interred a faw hours previous in the Lafayette Gemetery, and her grief at receiving the sad intelligence was uncontrollable.

The Voyage of the Great Eastern to Cape May.

Monsters, however curious as mere specta cles, are apt to be great nuisances when used for practical purposes. Towering giants serve very well to . draw ! audiences at museums, but instead of evincing general ability superior to that of other men, proportionate to their size, they are more apt to fall below than to exceed the average usefulness of ordinary humanity. The trip of the Great Eastern from New York to Cape May, which was intended specially for a pleasure jaunt, appears, from the graphic description furnished, by our special correspondent. as well as by the report of the Associated Press, to have been one of the most disagreeable journeys that can well be conceived, and no incident short. of the actual destruction of those on board was wanting to swell the cup of their misery. The passongers have evidently seen the sea-elephant to their hearts' content, and steamers henceforth will be rendered attractive in their eyes rather by diminutiveness than extraordiary size and inferior accommodations. It is true, the causes of complaint may more properly be attributed to bad management than to any inherent defect of the steamer herself: but a fatality seems to 'attend nearly all her movements, and each new performance, instead of brightening and relieving her gloomy destiny, seems only to elicit new depunciations against her.
