in saying that they anould be lound in every library in this country : Early in the year 1649 Governor Winthrop "took a cold, which turned into a fever," and proved fatal. On the 26th day of March of int year, he closed his eyes upon a scene of rare prosperity, which he, laboring with many other good and able men, had been the chief instrument in oreating. Near a great thoroughare of the happy city, which itself is but a part of his moun-ment, a simple tablet, inscribed with his bright and venerable name, covers the grave in which his body was laid antidat universal mourning. Most of his ample fortune had been sacrificad go the public service, and of the rest he had been spolled by a dishonest agent. The public grati-tude made provision for his infant child. Nineteen years had parsed since, disgusted with the dospotism and bigotry, that affilieted his heme, he had come, in the prime of manbod, to the va-rious sufferings and ordless anxieties of subduing a "bare creation," and of defending the fabric which he reared, there against hequility from with-out and from within. He had not learned that, before he died, the infatuated "King who had wrought such sorrow to him and his, had perished by the hand of public vengeaned.
