Senator Chesnut told a gentleman, a thing, than the supporters of Douglas are Dry Goods, embraing 1,200 lots of rich fancy and against any recognition whatever of the Presistaple articles in silks, worsted, linen, woollen and ago, that he would not regard the election of Lin coln as a cause for seceding from the Union, and there is no question that his sentiments are those of many of the leading men of the State. There are conflicting accounts from Georgia. Mr. Secretary Cobb claims that Breckinridge will beat both Bell and Douglas, but the friends of the latter assert that a union will take place between the Bell and Douglas men in a few days, and tha the State will go for this combination. The speech of Hon Alex. H. Stephens has produced an elec-trical effect, and he has written to the Douglas Central Committee at this point, that if the people of Georgia could be convinced that "The Little Giant" had any chance of carrying ceveral Northern States, there would be no doubt of such a combination between the conservative men o leorgia as would give it against Breckinridge The entire delegation in the present Congress, it luding Senators Iverson and Toombs, are ranged upon the side of the Disunionists. The house, it must be observed, was not crowded. This may be attributed to several causes some of which we shall here mention for the bene fit of the management. In the first place, then, it is most unreasonable expect that even the warmest admirers of operatic performances can so appropriate their time, and so regulate their engagements as to attend, night after night, at the Academy of Music, espe cially when nothing but familiar operas are given. The engagement of the Natali would, doubtless, induce many, even at an inconvenience, to attend whon they appeared. But we had be brought out during the Richings' engagement; them sandwiched-in, as it were, with Sig. them sandwiched-in, as it were, with Sig-norina Patti, on alternate nights. Opera, thrice

Before noticing the performances on Saturday him and his daughter—the Miranda of the place—evening, we have to touch upon a matter personal in the Enchanted Isle of Concert Hall A giance to Signor Brignoli. In our last notice of the Opera e wrote that Signor Brignoli " was so unpolite, it is whispered, as to decline taking the part of Manrico in Il Trovatore, with them (the Natali,) on Thursday evening." We gave the on dit which floated about the town, the actual belief being that Brignoli had declined singing until fer he had heard the above named prime donne at rehearsal. We are now informed, on the part of ignor Brignoli, that the rumor is unfounded, and that so far from declining to sing, he considers himself to have some cause for dissatisfaction with the Management in not having cast him for Manrico, which is a rôle precisely in his line.

In the opera of "Lucrezia Borgia," two elements are represented—love and jealousy Lucrezia is represented as feeling great maternal affection for Gennaro, who is her son unknown in that relation by himself, because unscknowledged by her until the last moment of the performance. On the other hand, Gennaro is haunted by an earnest desire to discover his pacentage, and though he is interested in Lucrezia his tender regard for her, avowed in Act I., is on irely secondary to his love for the unknown mo ther whom he seeks. When, at the close of Act I. sucrezia is taunted and insulted by the indignant young nobility, and Gennaro discovers her to be Borgia, whatever softer sentiment he might casually have entertained for her, evanishes at once and henceforth Lucrezia is nothing more to him but an object of abhorrence.
