Namples of the blankets in question were pro- duced in court. They are of very fine texture. The color is blue, and the goods cours in rolls, with the borders, as in regularly recognized blank- ets, marked through the piece. The winesses for the plaintiffs testified that the samples produced in court were known in com- merce as idankets, and they were sold as such; that they were of a facer quality than was mann- factured prior to the year 1849; for thereabout, and while they could be used as bed sovering, they would also answer for garments. In purchasing them from the manifacturer so much per, pund was paid, while Beaver and Pilot cloth; to which these blankets bore some resemblance, was charged as so much per yard, and witnesse itselfied that there was a distinction between these blankets and the coarser quality of Beaver ototh. The dovornment, or the other hand, contand that they goods was not knewn in 'the inartist until after the passage of the act of their year. An the act of 1857 adopted the solvedild' of the year'd6, the question would be, of course, whether these articles were included. A NEW PICTURE BY PACE.—The Tribune of Saturday says: Mr Page has at his studio in the Tenth-street Building some admirable copies of this near copies of. Titian could be, however admirable they may be. Two of these paintings are full-length portraits of extraodiancy power, and one of them has a life-sized composition, which the artist calls Dolce for nitest. It represents a group on the campagae, consisting of a schepterdi, two women, a young child, a dog, and two of three sheep. Those who are accustomed to the conven- tion than shopherds of the campagas, and to the manner in which isnillar subjects have been troat ed by other artists, can have no conception of the masterly skill displayed in this 'remark- ablo painting, which has nothing in it to dazle the oye or stir the passions of the spectator, but which revertholess facionates by its marveleus reality, for it does not seem a painting at all, but a group of actual persons and animals standing in the broad field, with statoly hills in the distance and the blue as by bonding overhead.
