tman, engraved by Buthe from a photograph by McClees, appropriately illustrates this well-writ-ten and instructive biography. Born in the State of New York, in 1798, he was well educated at home by his father, a Luthoran clergyman who had emigrated from Germany carly in life. Young Quitman taught school for a short time, and then, t the age of twenty one, went out to the West, to battle for broad, station, and fame. He reached Obilicothe, Ohio, at the close of 1819; studied the purpose of devising means by which that State alone, or in confederacy with other States, may second from the Union and form an independent Golaw there; was admitted to the bar; and, wending southward, planted himself at Natchez, Misernment. The causes do not otherwise appear eissippi, in Desember 1821. Here he speedily obtained high reputation and large practice at the bar, and exactly three years after first reaching than in general and ambiguous phreses.

Natchez married a fair Virginian, well endowed colings and material interests of every officen of with the goods of fortune, and in every way capable of making him happy. In 1827, he was led into politics and represented the city of Natchez in the State Legislature. As a member of the Judiciary Committee, he did the United States, and as we are at present in formed, all have a right to be heard. How does the case stand? During our Revolutionary war three millions of colonists united in a Declaration of Independence of Great Britain; formed a Butional Government a great deal to promote Law Reform. He did not seek honors, but they met him. The Governor under articles of confederation, and by the treaty appointed him Chancellor of the State, and the Legislature unanimously elected him A joint of peace in 1783 were recognized as free, sovereign and independent States. As colonists, each colon was, in some respects, independent of the other, but all were united under one sovereignty. In their struggle for nationality they substituted a Feresolution of both Houses invited him to propare a militia code for Mississippi, and he refused any compensation for this laborious work. In 1831, he rovisited his relations and friends in New York State. In 1832 he was again elected to the Legislature, where he assisted in forming the present Constitution of Mississippi, under which he was again elected Chancellor, which office he resigned in 1834, and was chosen Senator in 1835, and was

He was made Major General of militia in 1841 and, resigning his seat in the State Senate, became a candidate for Congress, but was defeated. Soon after, he visited Europe, and the account of this brief tour is one of the best written parts of the work. In 1845 General Quitman was a candidate for the United States Senatorship, but was defeated by Gen. H. Stuart Foote. When the Mexican war. broke out, Quitman volunteered his services, and was appointed Brigadier-General, in June 1846, and commanded the Mississippians and Tennes-sams at the battle of Monterey, where one horse
