he cares very little for the future. The way in which he contrives to manage Parliament and the People is surprising. Were Robert Macaire at the Treasury Chambers, Whitehall, instead of Lord Palmerston, the affairs of England could not be more adroitly managed than they are. The Palmerston policy is to hoax the British public, by immense promise and infinitesimal performance. A Reform Bill, promised four years ago, and deferred from Session to Session, on various pretences, was brought forward last Spring, and it is doubtful whether the Tories who opposed, or the Prime Minister who reluctantly death.

and it is doubtful whether the Tories who opposed, or the Prime Minister who rolucisally produced it, was most gratified at its rejection by the House of Commons.

There will scarcely be any new Reform bill introduced, as a Government measure, in the grain, does not want to extend the privileges of the masses. Few of his colleagues are anxious for Parliamentary Reform. The Aristocracy do not want it. Above all, Queen Victoria, indoctrinated with the contracted principles and politics of her German husband, who, we doubt not; considers the revolution in Italy as the saddest catastrophe of medern times, cannot much desire to have the power of the results of the provided the provided the provided the proper in the privileges and politics of her German husband, who, we doubt not; considers the revolution in Italy as the saddest catastrophe of medern times, cannot much desire to have the power of the power of the prime Minister who reduced the prime has been killed, and who had killed them; his breath was het, it might have burnt ears, had he spoken to soon; now he had at upon the white chief's blanket, he had eaten of his ment, and was quiet.

Colonel Lander responded that he had brought with him the brother of one whom the Pah-Utes had killed, and who had been robbed by them of his house and home; and that none of his family had ever injured a Pah-Ute. who, we doubt not; considers the revolution in Italy as the saddest catastrophe of medern times, cannot much desire to have the power of the People increased, by granting them the pelitical and social rights to which they are entitled. Mr. Briorn, leader of the popular section of the Commons, may not be disheartened by the failure of his numerous and strenuous efforts in favor of Reform, but he must feel, sanguine though he be, that it is hopeless, in the present tempor of Parliament, to attempt any thing more.

Though troublesome Reform be burked, as a Parliamentary subject, there are several other questions which, in the ensuing Session, are likely to prove troublesome and trying to the Palmerston Cabinot. Prominent among those are Bankruptcy Bill, the great subject of Law Reform, the great and growing coat of the China War, and the eternal apprehension of French invasion,—which last is about the most incapable aristocrat, Lord John Russelt, will cause much trouble to aged Palmerson.

bright sun, and a cool, bracing, autumn atmos phere, I found myself careering, school-boy like, over fences, and grain fields verdant with early promise, until exhaustion hinted the decay of boyhood's powers of endurance. Depressed at the thought that my physical tenacity no longer exist-ed as in days whilom, I seated myself on a broad top rail to recover the breath my gambols had cost me, and perhaps to obtain at the same time a more extended view of the riches lavished by the hand of Nature on this chosen spot of earth. From the right came up to me the hum of steam-driven loom and spindles, and the ten thousand occupations of man commingled in indistinguishable din. Northward spread out the undulating landscape; oheckered by brown plough-broken and grain-verdured fields, receding until the eye fails its distinguishing power in the blue haze of the distant hills. Westward and southward the eye sweeps the sum-mits of the Susquehanna, hemming ridges, and catches, through the crisp, transparent air of this magnificent fall day, the tall columns of smoke marking the sites of the furneces, at the foot of the Chiques, and at the mouth of the Conestoga. At my feet, and far off between the green fields runs the limestone macadamized road, marking its slopes.

Close at hand, and in the very bosom of this enchanting landscape—a landscape that Claude of Lorraine would have dwelt upon with rapture, and penciled with the inspiration of his art—lies ing through the little turn-stile on the summit of the slight eminence behind the mansion, I hastened along the recently improved walks, noticed the freshly trimmed vines, and new trellises, over which they will creep when the spring shall come, descended the winding slope where the eld Newfoundland dog met me, wagging his tail in a friendly manner, as though he recognized in me one whom his master was delighted to honor with a friendly grasp of the hand in days gone by, and crossing the wide gravelled carriage-way, stood upon the porch along which Mr. Buchanan had often pased to and fro, pondering the hopes and fears attendant on his ambition—the Presidency. The house and grounds are undergoing a thorough refitting. Paper-hangers, upholsterers, painters, scrubbors, cleaners, whitewashers, and gardeners, are all or have been busy preparing for the reception of Mr. Buchsnan after he shall have retired from the direction of, and active participation in the affairs of Government. In all the improvements and changes there is still exhibited that good taste which has ever characterized Mr. Buchsnan: nothing flashy; ne effort to bowilder, or embarrass the visitor by elaborate display. The impression is at once received, on crossing the threshold, of simple, unpretending comfort. Upon this entire absonce of all ornament, an ingenious pensioner of the President might base a corollary of eterling official qualities, and the envious, disappointed applicant infer the niggard economy of destiny, given not to mock or deceive, but to guide are all or have been busy preparing for the recep-tion of Mr. Buchanan after he shall have retired from the direction of, and active participation in,

The qualities of the men whom I have mentioned were wholly different. and on last Sunday, as a fitting conclusion to t course, he discussed the subject of the Resurr tect of the physical organization in which it pre-sides. As, then, the soul was not a shadow or

existence in some form, whether in the body or out of it, was a necessary result, from the fact that the laws of the human mind rendered the thought of an absolute end-of reducing something to nothing—an utter impossibility; and whatever was entirely incongruous with any of God's laws, whether of mind or matter, the speaker held, could not be true. In this sense the testimony of heathen philosophers, respecting the immortality of the soul, was worthy of consideration; for, al-

As introductory to our synopsis of this clesing discourse, we may state that the preceding ones, were intended, in some degree, to establish the dootrine of the soul's immortality by a process of reasoning, independent of Revelation. Starting out with the admission, that the subject to be considered was outside the domain of human science, and hence beyond the province of absolute knowledge, he undertook to lay a reasonable foundation for what can alone be received by faith. Thus, it was assumed that the soul of man is something, and that it exists, not because of the body in which it dwalls had a constant of the Financial CRISIS.
