The President's Message.

Am english view of the sucession theory.

I from the London Times, December 20, 1850.

To decide every case as much as possible on its own peculiar circumstances, to avoid abstract disquisitions, and long or complicated chains of argument, to refer everything to custom rather than to principle, and to avoid above all things general and sweeping propositions, has been the traditionary policy, and has become the invetorate habit of English statesmen. The direct contrary is the practice of American Presidents. Essay-writing is a part of their vocation. They assume the office.
