SATIN TABLE DAMASK, 1861 CALLED 8 4, 9-4, AND 10-4 WIDE.

I would say to the Dry Goods Merchants that, after ten years' experiment, I have succeeded in producing an article of WHITEY BROWN TABLE DAMASK, that will in every respect compare in WIDTH, STYLE, FINISH, AND DURABILITY with the imported, and at fifteen cents per yard less.

A sample of these goods can be seen at Wm. Watson & Co.'s. Bangs & Maxwell's, Stuert & Bro's, Philadelphia, or at my place, Frankford.

Any person can have 200 DOLLARS, or a case of contributions at the contributions. Any person years, who on calling at the above places gods without cost, who on calling at the above places will know that he can import, in the regalar way, read the codes, or goods that will compare with them, for least han filteen cents per yard more than these are offered I would say to the trade that this is the first season taken for public use, as in impressment, &c., was The fourth section was then adopted.

The fifth section, prohibiting the importation o slaves, was taken up. Numerous amendments were offered, and finally the proposition was adopted, with an amendme providing that nothing herein contained shall apply to the Southern States which have or may declare their separation, in case their separate independnce be acknowledged and continued The debate turned exclusively upon the surrender of Fort Sumpter. Mr. Carlile and Mr. Early deprecated the action f South Carolina in firing upon the fort, and expressed their devotion to the stars and stripes. The leading Secessionists applauded the gallantry f South Carolina, and maintained that, whatever the Convention might do, the people will take the State out of the Union. The committee then rose

A communication from the Governor enclosing a despatch from Governor Pickens, dated April 13, giving an account of Friday's bombardment, was received. Gov. Pickens says: "Not a man in our batteries was hurt. The fort was furious in its fire on us. Our iron battery did great damage to the fort's south wall.

"Our shells fall freely in the fort and the effect is supposed to be serious, as they are not firing this morning. Our Enfield batteries have dismounted three of his (Major Anderson's) largest Colum biads. We will take the fort, and can sink the fleet if they attempt the channel. If they land elsewhere we can whip them. We have now near seven thousand of the best troops in the world, and a reserve of ten thousand on the railroads. are full of horror. The Times says:

"So early as the middle of January it became evident that about 4,000,000 of people in the districts of Seharunpore, Mozufferungger, Meerut, and Bolundshuhur, east of the Jumna, and Muttra and Allyghur, westward of that river, would be involved in the visitation of an absolute famine. Making every allowance for those who did not immediately depend upon agriculture, and those who might have resources of their own, it was probable that 1,500,000 would in a few weeke be dying of hunger. Before the departure of the mail it were not except in that the country nown Delhi and Agra would add 3,500,000 to the population, with no other hope, of life, but the hand of charity. Day after day seems to add to the gloomy horizon. There was the gravest anxiety for the propedet of the Cis-Sutlej districts, and even for the West of the Indus. In fact, the crops had failed or were failing everywhere, except here and there under the Himalayas, or within the reach of artificial irrigation. In vast regions nothing was to be seen but iron-bound soil, which no plough could penetrate, relieved by a few patches of stamed stalks and half-withered blades, just enough to mock the hopes of the tiller. Crowds were living on the raw berries of the jungle. Here is the terrible truth Here are the figures."

Foreibly is it urged—all that England can do for India must be done. There is a repetition of the Irish famine of 1847 on the banks of the Indus and the Ganges. It may be anticipated, we fear, that the results will be far core fatal in Hindostan, where the enervating war. influences of the climate are se injurious to human life, than ever they were in Ireland, where the people really appear to possess a wonderfu tenacity of existence. England will do its duty, no doubt, but it is openly charged that the subscriptions in Bengal and the other Indian Presidencies, are scanty and slow-that the native Princes and the local proprietors are miserly and cold in their donations towards the relief of this great suffering; that Sullivan's Island, Cummings' Point, and Stevens

"The secounts that I have heard of the distress round about here are truly most awful. Those who have the means of migrating are all doing so from their famine cursed country; and my military informents told me that on the line of march they had passed many camps of these unfortunate refugees from hunger, hurrying on in search of a new Canaan. Everywhere was exhibited the tragedy of the deserted village. The aged and the infirm could be hardly said to be tenants where the jackal and the dog had undisputed sway. Human beings were seen grubbing up the ant-hills and robbing the occupants of their true heards of precious grains of corn. This, I assure you, is no fancied pleture—it is a fearful tragedy of real life. Not a drop of rain has fallen eactward of the Ganges, from Campore to Saharanpore, this season, and the spring crop is wholly lost, except where irrithe misery about Musseerabad:

Macaulay's History of England, Vol. V. Already have we noticed two reprints of this popular work. The first, a week or ten days in advance of the others, (in consequence of their having purchased proof-sheets, we resume,) was the neat 12mo volume, published by Harper & Brothers, of New York. The next was a comely 8vo, published by E. H. Butler & Co., of this city, to complete their ibrary edition. A. third, since received, has been issued by Crosby, Nichols, Lee, & Company, of Boston, and indeed completes the edition formerly published by Phillips, Sampson, & Co., now in the hands of C., N., L., & Co. The peculiar feature of this edition is a Sketch of the Life and | Anderson, but express abhorrence for those who Writings of Macaulay, extending to 104 pages, which states what he had done, as an author; how he had done it; what various eminent critics had written about his works; what sensation his unexpected death created; what funereal honors were rendered to him; and what eminent journals and distinguished writers had said of him, after he had passed away, alike insensible to earthly praise or blame. A portion of this bibliographical and their way to Fort Sumpter to quell the fire becritical sketch was prepared, in 1857, by Mr. S. A. Allihone for his Dictionary of British and American Authors, and actually had been read by Macaulay himself, with acknowledgment of the accuracy of its facts, and is now extended from 1857. This gives great value, we must say, to the Boston edition of Macaulay's History. At the same time, we cannot but regret that even such "a labor of love" should have taken Mr. Allibone away, even for a day, from the completion of the second and final volume of his great Bibliographical work, the Dictionary of Authors—a work, the fulness and accuracy of which we experience almost every day. Had Macaulay himself not been diverted, in like manner, from his great History to writing biographies for the Ency-clopædia Britannica, it is probable that, at his death, his History would have been completed to the accession of the House of Brunswick in 1714. Neither Macaulay nor Allibone should have yielded to these Delilahs of the imagina-
