Queen Victoria's Proclamation. The Proclamation issued by the British Government, in the name of Queen VICTORIA, which we published yesterday, does not exactly meet our idea of what such a State document should be. It can scarcely be accepted satisfactory by the United States, and in adequately represents the feelings and the wishes of the British people. We have repeatedly stated that these feelings and wishes are altogether with the North, and against the South. In Lancashire alone, the seat of the Cotton Manufactures, there may be a leaning towards the Secessionists-a leaning, not from any conviction that truth and justice are with them, but from selfish and interested motives. It must be borne in mind that, even though 2,500,000 people are more or less dependent on the Cotton Manufactory, these are not a large number in a population of about thirtyone millions. Lancashire, were its wealth six times what it nominally stands at, is not England-especially in sympathy with the South. The Proclamation, as we read it, virtually recognizes the Southern Confederation, even while professing a desire to maintain "a strict and impartial neutrality in the contest between the said contending parties." This is a very early, indeed an unusually carly, stage for the revolted States to be acknow. ledged. When the Proclamation was issued, the British Government knew nothing more than Fort Sumpter had tallen. Does that establish the National Independence of the rebel States ? That triumph, such as it is, seems likely to stand alone, now that the gallant and loyal troops, volunteer and regu. lar, of the United States are in action. The contest now in progress is simply rebellion on one side, while, on the other, it is an attempt, which must prove successful, to suppress and pupish revolt. It is not like the "Mutiny" in India, where oppressed Provinces, which once had been great Kingdoms, sought to throw off the voke of a foreign Power. It took England several months to put down that "Mutiny," in which Revolt gained some great victories-but the South, with the exception of its bloodless triumph at Fort Sumpter, has yet gained nothing by Secession.

Mr. Wickliffe offered a resolution, which we

The institutions of the United States, di rectly democratic, are not liked by the British Aristocracy. Almost every member of the Palmerston Cabinet has expressed antagonism to the Ballot, and to other American institutions. But the British people have respect and regard for their American friends and brethren, and this, added to their strong antislavery convictions, will make them averse to alliance with the South.

It is probable that the apparent meaning of the expression "contending parties," (which places the United States on a level with the revolted States,) is capable of being explained away. As it is, however, the Proclamation will not give satisfaction here-because, even while professing neutrality, it is not strictly neutral. At the very least, the British people would not side with the South. On the contrary, if called upon to make a demonstration, it would certainly be in favor of the North. Heavy is the responsibility of a Cabinet pledg-
