Warring with the Dead. In the British House of Commons, on the th inst., when various speakers eulogized the ate Count Cavour, the liberator of Italy, one person alone—Mr. Daniel O'Denoghue, memer for Tipperary—threw contumely upon the dead man's grave, saying "I am not afraid, even in this House of Commons, to say that I calumniating The O'Doneghue."

Our correspondent begs the question nearly all through this diatribe. We know that Mr. O'Donoghue is to present a numerously signed Repeal petition from Ireland to the House of Commons, and we have repeatedly and strongly written in advocacy of the prayer of that petition, from a thorough conviction that Ireland has never received good treatment from her English masters, and from a belief that to repeal the parchment Union of 1800, obtained by fraud, force, and bribery, would be an account of the Month of the South, by distributing, broadcast, strips of light paper, with the good intentions of the North printed thereon? Many of these strips would be carried miles and miles into the enemy's country ere they touched the ground, taking with them comported with the Month of poor deluded Southerners, many or whom need only to know the Union to fight for it. by fraud, force, and bribery, would be an actual benefit to both countries. We never did believe that any Parliamentary reparation of the wrongs of Ireland would follow the presentation of the petition. We did believe, however, that it would be treated with respect -a belief which vanished when we read Mr. tack upon dead Cavour. For there will
