the place-uniters, the ignorant and the priest-ridden, which are synonymous phrases, and the impatient. Most of these, with the simple prospect of adding another dish to their daily meal, would ery out "Viva Francisco" to a man. Such blind insensibility to their real position is at times most disheartening, but when it takes, as it commonly does, the form of ingratifude to the Piedmontese, it is disgusting. As I have remarked in other letters, the revolution was made by the few, and not by the many. The crisis is now one of great interest, and I wait with anxiety to see what the effect of Count Cavour's death will be on the flokle and volatile southerners and their numerous resolutionary enemies.
