ROUND ABOUT WASHINGTON. The Wanderings, Ponderings, and Out-of-the way Loiterings of a Roving Yankee (Correspondence of The Press.) NO. XVII. -OUR NATIONAL HOLY-DAY. It is in reality the Fourth of July-a day beyoud all others, which makes us revere the memory of our fathers, cherish the blessing they left us, and respect the duties and beauties of our long-honored social system. It is a combustible day. Everything relating to fire, except fire-eaters, is tolerated on this day. Especially is that great cousin of the royal incendiary known by the original inhabitants of this fair land as fire-water, endured by the free people of America. We are a nation of salamanders this day, and can swallow up the smouldering embers of Secession as though they were so much natural Who shall offer to suppress us? Nobody. Not a soul shall impede our way.
It will not be any use to put upon the fore of the national engine those significant words, Get out of the way, Old Dan Tucker!" The little bull of excommunication, popularly called "Secesh," has already trotted down the embankment, and may be seen, its tail over its back, glaring aghast, at the roaring, soaring progress of the "great machine."

It is now generally conceded that General individual who struck William Patterson, and that he don't deny it! Several other important patriotic inexplica-cies, I learn, have also been unfolded this day. It is my purpose not to quote a line of and Jeff. Davis. Silken garters and homnen took to be a hint. Of course, I prepared myself. My first sentence was: "Fellowthe music failed to come, and I found out, sort, as wise as the President himself. when it was too late, like my little friend Sir gallery of the House—a perfect oven. But, my illustrious namesake in the play says, "if I King, body and soul!" don't get out I'll choke.")

Look at them down on the floor! There's mental reservation in the item of body! Thaddens, the gigantic, giving a nudge in the ribs of that little colleague of his, who has been Growing so just these twenty-four hours. ilard by is an amiable gentleman from the Far West, who knows how to decline a contest with so much grace. He might say, (mark, I put the words in his mouth, and do t thereby violate my promise to quote no poetry)---Blair, here's your most profound good health! the outskirts I see several ex members. Tom Tom's a-cold!" But he has heart enough to warm him. Then, there is Gov. Morehead, of 'pon my conscience that must be Doctor Mac-kenzle, right under the Speaker's blessed nose cluses several members of the Senate. The galleries are crowded, ladies in fine summer bonnets and ribbons (such ribbons!) and offi-cers in red and blue and gold. How they glitter! Ugh, it dazzles me! Did you ever ook on the like before? speaking! Open your ears. Don't you be the hands of the Chief Magistrate. fighting cock (who can crow now as londly as eases) won't burt you, although he did rather threaten the galleries. But he immediately soothed it with a verse of poetry, (here I must again declare my irresponsi-"And the star-spangled banner, oh, long may O'er the land of the free, and the home of the brave," which, of course, made it all right. It is evening now. All around is as still and quiet as the sleep of those who made this day what it is, long, long ago, in the morning of our republic. The bubbles of exhibitantion, like the sparkles upon champagne, have passed over the brim, and have left a clear, crystal surface, unbroken and unmoved. The soldiers, weary of marching, have sought their tents and repose. The troops of men and women and noisy children, who filled the streets erewhile, are nestled in groups about doorways, or under the copies of sidewalk trees. The eyes that swelled with such lastre before streets erewhile, are nestled in groups about doorways, or under the copses of sidewalk trees. The eyes that swelled with such lustre before the early array of martial grandeur now dilate as they watch over a nobler spectacle, as it slowly burns through the summer melting blue of the sky. The lurid sun-rays have long since crept away from ruddy brick walls and painted chimney stacks, as if ashamed of the flery train whose starry front begins to blaze with a dazzling beauty, throwing out sprays and jets of variegated light in the darkening atmosphere. Lo! the comet, Heaven sent! Like a chariot of flame, jewelled with diamonds, it hurries through the welkin, in fit homage of the day we celebrate. A train, almost as radiant, bears it company, unfolding star upon star, as it moves onward. Where is it going 7 Nobody can tell. It rolls off in the West. It marks our national course. Its omen is of good. Some good people insist that it is singing "Yankee Doodle" as it flies. May be so—who knows?

J. T. H. THE CITY The President's Message in Philadelphia. The absorbing theme of yesterday was the mes sage of President Lincoln. In the expected doon ment the capacity of the Chief Magistrate for the emergency, and also his plans and intents relative to the emergency, were to be studied. The mes sage was to be, in fact, an outline of the principles and pelicy of the war. It was not only to echo but to form the sentiments of the masses. It was to give shape and strength to the great popular mind, and set at rest both the hopes and the fears of the American people. Men looked for it, as boys who follow the lips of not know. And so, moment after moment, the newspaper offices, and at convivial places, made of the day, a single long inquiry, " Is the message

I have heard seve-ral orations to day—all poetry—nothing but possession of the document. The reporters were poetry, crowns, and laurels, and eagles, with eagerly questioned as to its sentiment and tone. an indiscriminate sprinkling of stars and The newsboys, ever alive for fraudulent sales, ran garters—the latter in compliment of the ladies through the highways crying aloud, "Here's the Evening Bully Tin-Message of the Presy dent!" garters—great rage—popular idea. How the cannons roar! They roar, as one may say, "let them roar again." I had expected a serenade myself. They were serenading all the great men. Somebody gave me what I roarious with the announcement that it might be ed, the merning and the afternoon were whiled away, in futile delay, until, at five o'clock, the message was issued, and the streets became uproarious with the announcement that it might be had, with its entire array of valuable suggestiens, for the low price of two cents. To such rates have the Presidential pearls been reduced. For a couple of nickels, each citizen could be placed in possession of the war message, and thus become, in some sort, as wise as the President himself.

In the first place, the people read the display heads, that prefaced such extras. "$400,000,000 to be negotiated for!" They liked it, again, because it was concise.
There was no flummery about it, and little art. A plain, honest statesman, who did not need to be roundabout, because he knew that he was right, was speaking to his "fellow-citizens," as man to men; stating the case, its causes and its issues, its

On Sunday night it rained very hard, so that I was obliged to cover my gun with my woollen blanket, and lay on my oil cloth; it did not take me long to get wet through, and I lay in that cendition till daybreak, when the sun came out and dried me off. At 1 o'clock the order came for us to break up camp and take up our line of march. Being on guard that evening, it devolved on me with the rest to act as rear or baggage guard, which is the worst part of the duty of a soldier. At a given signal our tents fell to the ground at the same second of time (and to an outsider it must have appeared like magic.) At 2 we were on the march. After marching a mile the skies were darkened, and sho rily the rain descended in torions; in a few minutes we were wet to the skin, while the road, which in the best weather was minerable enough, became almost impassable. A most beautiful set of sclors was presented to Col. Ellmaker's regiment, of the Gray Reserves, by a patriotic lady of this city, who accompanied the gift with a tasteful letter. The presentation filly took place on Independence day, and we feel assured that the "Reserves" will bear those colors in a manner worthy of the graceful gift, of the motives which inspired the act, and of the day on which the ceremony took place.

Company G, Gray Reserves, met at their armory on Thursday morning at five o'clock for parade. Captain George W Wood and Lisutenant Gorman were agreeably surprised by the presentation of dress swords as testimonials of esteem from the members of the company. Mr. H J. White delivered the sword in a neat and patriotic speech. The captain replied in his usual laconic style—his forte not being words, but action. The presentation to Lieutenant Gorman was made by H. P. It would be invidious to particularize corps where sill were excellent, but the General may be permitted to return his thanks to the in-sted corps for the handsome contribution they have siforded to the most invosing military diplay that Philade-phis has ever witnessed. The moral effect upon the en ire country of the ap-pearance of such a force as was paraded yesterday, attr Philadelphis had furnished more than 20,000 of her sons for arrives in the field against the enem; can-not be too highly estimated.
