WEDNESDAY, JULY 10, 1861.

OUR WAR CORRESPONDENCE. Letter from Hagerstown. pondence of The Press.] HAGERSTOWN, July 7, 1861. The maiden battle of the command of General Patterson at Hainesville having excited much martial and civic joy, an accurate, partial, corrective account of it-may not be unacceptable to your numerous readers, as given us by several intelligent "lookers on," and the wounded of the Wiscousin and the Eleventh Pennsylvania Regiments. Exact justice to the patriotic brave, however humble his grade, is demanded of all as a tribute to true, substantial merit. It creates a spirit of emulation, inciting to deeds of india spirit of emulation, including to deeds of individual valor, which makes an army one of heroes. The advance, consisting of the Mc-Mullin Rangers, Wisconsin and Eleventh Ponusylvania Regiments, and the City Troop, left Williamsport at four o'clock A. M., on Tuesday, and approached Mr. Porterfield's farm, six miles across the Potomes from Williams. six miles across the Potomac from Williams. port, at about 101 o'clock, in the following port, at about 103 o'clock, in the following order: Skirmishers, composed of McMullin's Rangers and the Wisconsin, closely followed, first by the Wisconsin Regiment, immediately behind which was the Eleventh Pennsylvania Regiment, with the City Troop in the rear. Porterfield's farm, from which the enemy first fired, is upon elevated ground, to which the Federal forces were ascending in the order above stated, unconscious of their presence, when the rebels, whose force consisted of four regiments and five hundred cavalry, fired upon our men from the brow of the hill from within Porterfield's house, barn, coach house, and trees where they were concealed on the approach of the skirmishers. To quote language of Captain McMullin, when the enemy rose from the wheat-field and from behind the fences, and appeared in the places of their concealment, from which they fired simultaneously, they seemed to number 10,000. It is the opinion of Captain McMullin and other officers, as well as the men, had not the first fire of the rebels been very high, which passed entirely over their heads, the destruction of life would have been frightful. After the first fire the Rangers scattered, the more effectually to dislodge the enemy from their concealment, and so too did a portion of the Wisconsin and Pennsylvania Eleventh. From the vantage ground occu-pied by the enemy, and their hiding places. not more than five companies of our men were brought into action. Those who participated tion, to return their fire, said to Gen. Patterson, who had just reached the place of engage-ment, "My God, General! flank your men ont;" at which moment the redoubtable battery of Perkins arrived, and, without orders, opened his fire of shells upon the rebels, with such terrific haves, that they fied at once in the wildest disorder—the officers throwing away their coats, and some their swords, and the men their haversacks, and every article of weight. Several elegant swords of much the men their haversacks, and every article of weight. Several elegant swords of much the men their haversack containing thirty about from which the boys had as yet been unable to dislodge them—they numbering dollars in gold, were picked up in the road. Perkins immediately on their hasty secession from the road to intercept their flight, which he would have done with complete success but for a run right behind, laid flat down. We then opened

In this affair I must say our men displayed great coolness, and although we saw several dead and a number wounded, and the big guns of the enemy sent their messages all around us, no signs of fear were shown. caused them to move from their hiding places, when a ball hit him below the knee; regard-less of his paintul wound, he continued firing until he became insensible. He said before they left their native State the ladies presented them with a beautiful regimental flag, which with a chicken, ham, or something else, at they received on bended knee, with uplifted hand, with the pledge never to surrender it, but with their lives, and how nobly thus far have they kept their sacred vow in the shock of battle and its deadly strife! Capt. McMullin during the engagement was pushed back about twenty yards, and thrown of honor to the ground by a retrograde movement of the City Troop, and lost his sword, which he soon afterwards recovered. The attack being a surprise, as Capt. McMullin assures us, the men fought without general orders, while waiting the coming of Gen. Patterson, with intropid valor, which orders the battery of Perkins rendered unnecessary, for the traiton power" with the discretion of Falstaff, and they preferred a cup of sack at Martinsburg which they finished taking filteen minutes be fore the arrival of our column. While enjoying their uneasy repose at this place of retreat, a notorious rebel, formerly of Maryland, of the name of Robert Swann, who is a lieutenant of cavairy in the 500 who were present at the engagement, boasted of their having killed 500 of the Black Republicans, to which a Unionist significantly replied, What in the devil, then,

After having been slightly engaged in our first brush. I have half an hour to tell you in, so here goes.

We'crossed the Potomac again last Tuesday morning, at 8 o'clock, the Wisconsin and the Eleventh having been thrown over the night previously, as skirmishers, but ours was the previously of a man. We then visited Fort previously, as skirmishers, but ours was the previously of defence of the proviously of defence of the pro a rough specimen of a Zouave, of the death of Haines, was very suggestive, indeed.

among other things not to be made public, would soon be occupied and fully protected by heavy entrenchments. Partly retracing our steps, and taking another road, we came to Arlington, to pay our respects to General. McDowell, who occupies the residence of General Lee, and which was one of the most magnificent buildings of its day, and although now very old; and not to be campared with more modern buildings of its rank, still there is a grandeur about the old place, rendered doubly interesting from its associations and also the natural beauties of the surrounding country that impressed itself deeply on our mind. Above here, on the heights opposite Georgetewn, we found the Sixty-ninth Regiment, (the Highlanders,) who occupy Fort Corcoran, and in the neighborhood of which are being erected stock-houses, which remind one forcibly of frontier life.

There were many things pointed out, and parts of plans, &c., discovered to us, and for itear of giving information which should be withheld prevents us from writing as freely as we would wish, but will simply say to the people, rest easy, and leave all to the Adminpeople, rest easy, and leave all to the Adminpeople rest easy, and leave all to the Adminpeople rest easy, and leave all to the Adminpeople rest easy, and leav vost Guard of this place, as you see by the doubly interesting from its associations and enclosed extract from a paper printed in a also the natural beauties of the surrounding former Secession office.
