will be in the European correspondence of our leading newspapers. The post which was settled by that Victoria has been alarmingly depressed in spirits, since her mother's death; that she has been persuaded to keep herself in the hands of her usual medical advisers, which has been done.

The London Evening Standard, of June 26, contains the following account of Victoria's return to the continent. It will be seen to be very significantly and suggestively worded: Her Majesty yesterday paid a private visit to the Emperor of the French at the Hotel de la Paix, and intended to have been the opening by her presence, but was prevented by the illness of the Emperor.

A few days subsequently, Queen Victoria presided at a Privy Council, when she delivered a lengthy and important speech. Her Majesty's speech was a masterpiece of eloquence and statesmanship.

It was exactly during Victoria's temporary withdrawal from public affairs that the ill-fated and ill-timed expedition of the rebelled Southern States, as it is called, to the United States of America, was undertaken.
