The force of the enemy is estimated at between 7.000 and 8 000, who advanced from Philipps on Saturday and took up a position on a hill about a mile and a half from our post, which, however, is obstructed from the view of our troops by a still higher hill directly between them and ourselves. The same correspondent, writing on the 9th, gives the particulars of the second day's fighting, as follows:

The firing was continued all night by the regiment of Coi. Fulkerson, with but little execution, however, as the night was very dark Certainly, none of our troops were injured.

This regiment in turn was relieved by the gallant Georgians, under Col. Ramsey, at day break Monday morning, who, until a late hour in the day, kept up a continual fire upon them, and succeeded in killing six of the Yankees, and taking a lleutenant prisoner. The number of them wounded, of course, cannot be ascertained. The Georgians left the ground in the afternoon with not a man killed, or even a scartch.

ON STIME 122 I advise every one who has a Cough, or a Husky dashing policy; and it is a fair question for those dinauthority to consider whether it would not be better to meet and satisfy this temper; even at the cost of cocasional reverses, than to lose the advance with trees and shrubbery, not in the least damaging any of our men, but with a lose to them of a large amount of powder. In consequence of the rapid discharge of artillery, our general sent out two regiments (the 23d and 20th) to sustain the Georgians, but they did not succeed in getting a chance at the enemy, and during the night retired from the field, with the hope of inducing the foe to fol low them, so as to get them in the range of our artillery. It is supposed that our infantry and rifles had done such execution among them that the enemy got his "bile" up a little and let loose his big dogs of war, which, however, preved as harmless as his leaden pups.

The fing is still going on, 12 o clock Tuesday, but I have not heard what damage has been dene. How long we are to continue this brush fighting it hard to tell, but our troops are ge ting weary of it, and are exceedingly anxious to get them in a face-to-face battle, and thus decide the constitute of the means of face to-face battle, and thus decide the constitute of the means of the surpose of the nature and wante of an army. Dear Sir. in my recent theses, which was from neglected cold on my breast and lungs, and which was in a fair way of hurrying me to my grave. I was so much affected by the severity of the coult hithat I could not lie down or obtain any rest, and this continued for two weeks. When I heard of Dr. Schenck's Pulmonic and Sea Weed Tonic, I immediately commenced the use of them, and, after using two or three boties of Syrup. I notised a perceptible change. The cough was much easier, and I could rest much better. After using two bottles of Tonic and ten of Syrup, I have been restored to health, which enables me to say I have full confidence in its efficacy if taken in time, and most cordially recommend its use to the afflicted.

Respectfully yours,

It is of course, the purpose of an army to reduce, as much as possible, the amount of baggage for which transportation is required. But when reduced to the lowest point, fifteen wagons, with four horses each, to each full regiment of infantry, is a fair allowance. For an army of 50 000 men, are thus required 750 wagons and 3 000 horses, which would extend in single file, each wagon occupying only one hundred feet, something a more than fifteen miles. All these wagons had to be made and all these horses purchased, before any considerable movement in advance was possible. This number was required for the troops expected to advance from Washington alone. Half as many were wented for Gen Patterson's column, and at lease 200 wagons and 800 horses for Gen. Butler's column. This makes no account of the horses needed for the artillery or the cavalry. It is merely the number requisite to convey the endispensable baggage, or as the Romans accurately and expressively stoled. MARINE INSTRANCE. HENRY C. SPALDING. To all parts of the World ream.
