She loved a soldier—Ephraim was his name. "Oh tell me, passengers," she cried, "Oh, tell me, soldiers, if you can, Where my dear Ephraim you have spied, A bandsome and polite young man. Oh, tell me, Captain, tell at once the truth, Have you beheld that most alluring youth?" " Why, Miss, among these volunteers Polite and handsome lade enough you'll find:"

"But none," said Sally, "like my love appears; To none, besides, my fancy is inclined; Oh, Captain, when at TOWER HALL he bought Those regimentals, my poor heart was caught." Enhaging who to the table had gone To seck refreshments, heard her voice divine,

And, like a whirlwind now came rushing on, Exclaiming, "Oh, dear Sally, I am thine." I know thou art," she said, "that suit alone, From Tower Hall, would make me all thine own."
