affectionate tribute to his labors, character, and man, abler none; fair-haired and redder than a windy morn." These quotations, the most prosaic prose, are printed as blank verse, (very !) the first commencing the prologue to Tennyson's famous poem, "The Princess," and the second forming part of the conclusion of the same. Not so wrote Milton and Young, Akenside and Thomson, Cowper and Southeyabove all, not so wrote Wordsworth, and not so writes Stockton. He is master of rythm, and if we print his blank verse as prose, it still will read like the high-toned poetry it is. He has lired poetry-as so he writes it. The poetic faculty is strong in his family-his sister, the late Mrs. Evans, was a poet, and so is his younger brother, John Drean Stockton. "Faith and Sight : or, the Spirit-World and Sense-World," which commences Mr. Stockton's volume, is but a portion of a longer poem. The first part treats of the Divine government of the world-this is the theory-and the second, shows as the example, Abraham, friend of God, and father of the faithful. We shall give a couple of brief quotations from this. Here is the poet's conception of a sinless world : Had not the gentle five inclined her ear, Touched with strange music, to the tempter's voice,

And had not Adam, fondly, husband-like, For weal or woe, his fair companion's fate Embraced, in love-though not the less in sin ; And had their hallowed nature, never lost. Supromely ruled in all their rising train Of sons and daughters-as their evil, now : Then, in the universal reign of peace. have gone through five editions. But, tho-roughly to comprehend his power in the pulpit, it is necessary to hear him preach. He is one of the finest natural pulpit-orators we ever heard—and we have listened to the most emi-nent. The volume of Poems, now given to the world by Mr. Stockton, will insure him a high reputation. Two-thirds are in blank verse, under the head of "Rythm"—the remainder is in "Rhyme." To our taste, the blank verse is far the best. Indeed, next to Cowper and Wordsworth, no modern poet exhibits so much command over the diffi-culties of this description of poetry. In nu-merous instances, even when Tennyson has

General Scott's Letter.

General Scott's Letter. [From the London Daily News, Dec. 5.] General Scott has not simply contradicted a mis-chietous report : he has given a deliberate oplaton, worthy of his high reputation and of the services he has rendered his country. He says: "It is ne-cessary that the good relations between England and America should be preserved." It is most unlikely that he would have been at the trouble to say this if he had become accustomed to different sentiments and opinions within the circle of the Government which he has just quitted at Washing-ton. "I hope," he continues, "that Earl Russell and Mr. Seward will agree on a solution of the ques-tion whether the persons who were arrested on and Mr. Seward will agree on a solution of the ques-tion whether the persons who were arrested on board the Trant were contraband of war or not. If they were agents of the rebels, it will be diffi-oult to complete and the second second second second second were less contraband of war that rebel solidiers or cannons." The veteran discusses law like a sol-dier, and evidently has no taste for the precedents of Hautefeuille or Philimore. But although the matter cannot be disposed of exactly as the General imagines, we may confidently say that, if the Wash-ington Government is prepared to treat the affair of the Trent in the candid and straightforward spirit of its most illustrious officer, il ought not to be diffi-cult to arrive at a result which shall spare us a war from which we instinctively recoil, deliver us from from which we instinctively recoil, deliver us from the horrible necessity of subserving the slave cause, which we abominate, and enable the two Governments to settle the law of the sea on a basis more in accordance with the needs of the extended commercial intercourse of our times. This would be a better issue of the Trent dispute than the finest list of ships burnt, sunk, and destroyed, and at present we see no reason to despair of such an agreemont, any part of their pay, and what additional facilities may be extended for that object, and to report thereon as follows: By a general order from the War Department, Adjutant General's Office, dated September 19, 1860, a system of allotment rolls was adopted, to be used by the volunteers for the purpose of transmit-ting portions of their pay to their homes, free of expense to them. This system if faithfully ear-ried out, will, it is believed, afford all the facilities required. A copy of the general order, No. 91, current se-ries, is herewith enclosed, exhibiting the plan strenion is respectfully called. Under axising laws a suffer has a prior claim on the pay of the men before the allotment, and this often sweeps of a nortion or all of the share allowed by the solder for the use of his family. A soldier makes his allot-ment on entering the service, and before contract-ing a debt to the suffer; and the money so assigned ought not to be allowed to be diverted from the eminety proper purpose for which it is intended. to satisfy the claims of suffer, septectilly when these latter are so notoriously exorbitant and unjust.
