LETTER FROM "OCCASIONAL."

WASHINGTON, April 2, 1862. At last the Republicans in Congress are beginning to shape and settle their policy in regard to the rebellion. It is the centre-piece of a great debate, and is characterized by a lofty independence, deep thought, and a comprehensive view of the national exigencies.

Mr. Fessenden is a thorough statesman of the Clay and Webster school, and is one of the noblest spirits of the age. He is never out of the subject. Watching all the details of legislation, from the smallest bill that relates to the District of Columbia, he is perhaps the most accurate and just man of the Senate.
