Mr. DIVEN (Rep.), of New York, said his belief, was that the power of Congress on this question was ex-premely limited. By evided to abelief subwory in the Dis-tric of Columbia still thinking that when that was done, all the power which the Constitution gives Congress over the question of slavery was exhausted. He, however, wanted Congress to abolish slavery in all places where it has the power to do so unner the Constitution. In this he was actuated by a dusire to establish peace and se-carity, and maintain the Constitution, raher than im-pair ft. Let slavery be left with the States alone. The principle of the Ripublican party was that Congress has no power there to intrifere with it, nor dust the Constitu-tion take slavery anywhere, and that slavery existed same to read from an epinic of Justice Story, delivered in the Single Contin in heter times, not long agol, to show the slavery warder, forts.
