LATEST NEWS FROM GEN. BANKS.

His Army Across the Potomac. No Rebels in Sight. Further Particulars.

The following is the latest received from Gen. Banks: Washington, Md., May 26, 1862.

We believe that our whole force, and all will be in good order, by the labor of which was faithful.

Particulars of the Fight at Front Royal, Virginia. The following is an account of the fight at Front Royal, Virginia, on the 24th inst.

At first the rebel line, after a short engagement, broke, and fled in confusion, leaving a large number of arms and accoutrements.

Our loss was not heavy, and we have secured a large number of arms and accoutrements, which will be of great service to our army.

It is not impossible that the cavalry of Norfolk and New Orleans have selected the correct route for their march.

LETTER FROM "OCCASIONAL." Victory will again crown our banners, and the names of Richmond and Corinth will shine like new stars.

At last we have an answer to this question in a proclamation by Governor Johnson, issued on the 10th inst.

It is plain to see that the policy of the Government is to reduce the rebellion to a state of complete submission.
