On Saturday evening last, several men indulging in lake bathing had a lesson taught them which they will not soon forget. A number of horses came to the lake shore to drink, when they were caught by the bather frightened, when one of them, not waiting for his rider to dismount, tore up through the city at a furious gallop, so that things were perplexing, for the residents were quite shocked with a horse and rider in such undress uniform deshing through the streets."

Moral — Never mount a horse unless you are clothed, as it will add to your comfort; and let the clothing, if possible, be from Charles Stokes', under the Continental; it will add to your looks.
