struggle, where the most momentous issues are at stake, there can be but two parties, the loyal and the disloyal; and whereas, the hour of action has come, in which every man should choose his side and show his colors:

Therefore, Resolved, That we, the citizens of Manayunk, will not now wait to expatiate on the cause, dispate the mistakes, nor conjecture the consequences of this cruel war, in this the hour of our country's peril, but we will, as with one heart and one voice, give a hearty response to THE MONEY MARKET PHILADELPHIA, August 6, 1862 W want more legal tenders. The wants of the countriend the funding of large quantities into the fivewuty bonds has so rapidly absorbed those issued that, desite the cries and grosms of the tremblingites, there is a sarcity of currency. In some parts of the country the baus are contracting their issues, in others, and those of thearge cities are expanding to an extent that more than neuralizes the short issues of the country banks. The team of this is obvious: The city banks have a more clasoring necessity for currency; situated in the centres of tade and business, they boldly supply the demand uponthe counters in their own obligations; but the country bars, knowing that a large amount of treasury notes, word soon be on the market, began to grow timid and feathat parties might collect their notes, and demand the redemption in large amounts, and, being less posted as I the wants of business communities, they preferred usig United States issues to their own. This action of the country banks, of course, absorbed a great many of the gal tenders and helped to give them their popularity. An now, at this period of the war, which, had predictions bee made that it would have lasted thus long, but few cold bare promised to see anything else on the 6th of Augst, 1882, than a great country ruined—its resources exhusted, its treasury depleted, its credit destrayed, and tand explosion of communities, corporations, legal birdness, and social intercourse taking place. Requery wood have held a strong hand upon civil rights, license well have taken the place of liverty, desolation would have upplanted prosperity, barbarity succeeded humaniti, the howie knife and dagger would have drawn life blood where the ploughshare and sickle had wrought, While be only legal tender to be acknowledged would have been a pair of strong arms, fortified by a huge pair of fists. Yet here we are, strong in power and financial resource, with a people more than ever determined to be united the pursuit of the one great cause—the suppression of the rebellion—a credit that the world (or, at leat, inglish capitalists) are beginning to nourishis the currency of the country? This it is impossible to answer: but, from the outside demand for it, and from the acknowledged want of it among the banks, it is plain that the market is not flooded, or even full. There is already suffering from scarcity, and yet ignorant whinsters drawl out their fears that we have too many legal tenders. Let these people take a walk through the cities and into the banks to raise a few thousand, and they will begin to see that it is not so easy a task that they have before them.
