

TUESDAY, AUGUST 14, 1862.

No news taken up of same; more communications. We do not return reprinted manuscripts.

No correspondence solicited from all parts of the world, and especially from our different military and naval departments. When used, it will be paid for.

FORNEY'S WAR PRESS.—STILL IMPROVING.—THE WAR PRESS, FOR SATURDAY, AUGUST 16, is now out. It contains a vast amount of reading, including a good account of the REBELLISH BATTLES OF THE DAY, and Jackson's forces and the Union troops under General Pope.

CONTENTS:

A FINE ENGRAVING.—Harris Mason, Hart's Son's Letting, James River, the present Headquarters of Gen. McClellan's Army.

LYON SOMERS—An Original Tale of the War, by "Boxo."

NAMES AND ARGUMENTS OF FOURTEEN HUNDRED SOLDIERS who have arrived in Philadelphia this week. (The feature alone in the WAR PRESS makes it valuable to every family in the country.)

MISCELLANEOUS.—Important Papers—Instructions in Preparation for soldiers—Letters—A Correspondence before a United States Grand Jury.

WAB TITL AND HUMOR.—The Money Market—Philadelphia Produce Markets—Philadelphia and Harrisburg, City Markets.

TERMS OF THE WAR PRESS.—Two Dollars a week, with great reductions to Cities. It is the best weekly NEWSPAPER published.

THE WAR.

The most impudent feature of the Southern news, which we print to day, is the repetition of the statement that Baton Rouge has been retaken by Breckinridge. Is some particular statement the undoubtably true, but as a whole, it is extremely improbable.

The rebel journals say that on the first day (Tuesday, Aug. 5) Breckinridge was repulsed with heavy loss, out of his men and a colonel being killed. This defeat, which no doubt really was sustained, was attributed to the non arrival of the Arkansans. On Wednesday, however, Breckinridge pens a despatch claiming to have occupied the whole town and battle-field on Tuesday evening, having gained the victory by the assistance of the Arkansans, which did arrive in the afternoon. He speaks of having "put them up badly," and boasts that he burned nearly all the camps and a large amount of stores, besides killing a number of prominent officers, including General Williams. It detracts somewhat from the credibility of this despatch that it is dated "Ten miles from Baton Rouge." Successful general does not usually run their bulletin ten miles from the scene of their victory. Our dispatches from New Orleans to the 23rd state. The next arrival will probably bring us the intelligence that an attack was made upon Baton Rouge on the 5th, which resulted in the dislodging of the Arkansans, and repulse of the rebel force. At any rate, Baton Rouge has not yet been retaken, and this is the only point which is clearly established in the rebel despatch.

A despatch from Culpeper Court House, published yesterday, says: "Jackson's loss can scarcely be less than fifteen hundred. Our loss is much less. The battle was decidedly the bloodiest of the war." This is a little minute. If the losses reported with anything like an approximation to rectify for life. One more gathering of every energy! It is to repel the destruction of everything that you are, of everything that you can be. One more concentration of the innate force of every particle! Our more effort of your dental atoms to preserve their cohesion! It is for their own integrity. It is for the maintenance of the whole stone's structure of states. It is for the safety of the nation. The mighty arch which centers plank you are. The welfare of each is inseparable from the welfare of all. Nay, in the vast association of national destinies which is slowly evolving from this wild chaos and anarchy of social and political upheavements, you, having a given place, standing immovable in the center, are the basis of the architecture of the world's regeneration. It is not chimerical to say; for this aggregation of American units into one self-supporting arch is God's way of promise to all peoples. The old landmarks are swept away. Torrents of doubt have engulfed them—but doubt heaven-born. The world has grown too corrupt. It was seething in pollution and rioting in every licentiousness. Conscience was cowardice; liberty was license; law was tyranny; and Despotism rode rough-shod in the tracks marked by the soft sensibility of Sensibility and Scrivity. On such an earth the windings of heaven were opened, the gates of closing waters burst open, and the flood of the few nations, and the world was whirled in sickness, confusion, blight, disease, desolation, belligerence, they have sent one messenger after another over the mad waters to see it a bird's foot of gloom could be found. Yet one by one have the generations gone out; but one by one they returned again wet and weary. Not till, now, has the olive branch, peeping from salt depths, been seized; nor till this nineteenth century swept out on the wing of faith and returned on the wing of triumph, could the nations "know that the waters were abated." They come forth purified, and, kneeling with their faces upward, our arch of liberty as a bow of promise greets them.

LETTER FROM "OCCASIONAL."

WASHINGTON, August 13, 1862.

The better part of yesterday among observing men in this quarter is the future operations in Virginia, to be developed by the rebels. The rebels. The fight of Saturday last, not only an evidence of the wise and adroit management of the most uncomplaining and least captious soldier in the service, General N. P. Banks, but a proof that the rebel plan of a new raid in the valley and upon Washington had been checked. How far the retreat of Jackson will be able to make his pursuit effectual, and he calls it a pursuit of a flying foe—the effect upon McClellan cannot fail to be most fortunate. That final officer, according to all advice, has brought his vast command into splendid discipline, and with the aid of the navy, may strike a crushing blow at any moment. Nothing but unforeseen events prevent his demonstration on Malvern Hill from being a great victory. As it was, the withdrawal of his troops from that important point was effected with signal success. Burnside will vainly and vigilantly on his new base, and is in the best condition to receive an assault, but he need not be afraid of a successful attack. He will be able to make his pursuit effectual, and he calls it a pursuit of a flying foe—the effect upon McClellan cannot fail to be most fortunate.

General McClellan's army, it may now be admitted, is about to make a very important movement, the success of which is almost inevitable, if there is any value in skilfully laid plans, whose execution is entrusted to our ablest officers.

What this movement is, we are not presumed to know, and therefore, cannot at the present time divine. Of this, however, we are confident, that it will startle and delight every Union-loving citizen, and carry apprehension to the breast of every traitor. Richmond is a doomed city.

The aspect of affairs has totally changed since the battle of Bull Run. Then the prospect was all gloom, and the observation of the London Times, that "Richmond was safe for this year," seemed very like a truism. Three months have not yet passed, and the army is upon its feet again. Before another month elapsed, we shall see that army swelled to a million, and we shall see some grand events transpiring.

The London Times of July 30th was of the opinion that our civil war would end with this summer. Has the Times stumbled for once upon a true prophecy? The news from McClellan will very soon enable us to decide this question.

From Gen. BURNSIDE's army we learn that on

Friday the rebels captured a wagon train, with

mules, near Fredericksburg, together with sixty-

seven teams and soldiers, who had given out on the march, and had been picked up by the train.

The wagons, eleven in number, also contained a large lot of blankets and commissary stores, belonging to Hatch's brigade. They had become separated from the balance of the train by some miles, and the rebel cavalry, coming from Guiney's, intercepted them.

THE NEWS.

Hon. BEVERLEY JOHNSON has arrived in Washington. Mr. McLELLAN's orders are received, and he is to proceed to New Orleans and take command, and report his opinion on the merits of the official acts of Gen. Butler in seizing certain large amounts of treasure in the custody of foreign consuls, and which is almost inevitable, if there is any value in skilfully laid plans, whose execution is entrusted to our ablest officers.

What this movement is, we are not presumed to know, and therefore, cannot at the present time divine. Of this, however, we are confident, that it will startle and delight every Union-loving citizen, and carry apprehension to the breast of every traitor. Richmond is a doomed city.

The aspect of affairs has totally changed since the battle of Bull Run. Then the prospect was all gloom, and the observation of the London Times, that "Richmond was safe for this year," seemed very like a truism. Three months have not yet passed, and the army is upon its feet again. Before another month elapsed,

we shall see that army swelled to a million, and we shall see some grand events transpiring.

The London Times of July 30th was of the opinion that our civil war would end with this summer. Has the Times stumbled for once upon a true prophecy? The news from McClellan will very soon enable us to decide this question.

From Gen. BURNSIDE's army we learn that on

Friday the rebels captured a wagon train, with

mules, near Fredericksburg, together with sixty-

seven teams and soldiers, who had given out on

the march, and had been picked up by the train.

The wagons, eleven in number, also contained a large lot of blankets and commissary stores, belonging to Hatch's brigade. They had become separated from the balance of the train by some miles, and the rebel cavalry, coming from Guiney's, intercepted them.

THE NEWS.

Hon. BEVERLEY JOHNSON has arrived in Washington. Mr. McLELLAN's orders are received, and he is to proceed to New Orleans and take command, and report his opinion on the merits of the official acts of Gen. Butler in seizing certain large amounts of treasure in the custody of foreign consuls, and which is almost inevitable, if there is any value in skilfully laid plans, whose execution is entrusted to our ablest officers.

What this movement is, we are not presumed to know, and therefore, cannot at the present time divine. Of this, however, we are confident, that it will startle and delight every Union-loving citizen, and carry apprehension to the breast of every traitor. Richmond is a doomed city.

The aspect of affairs has totally changed since the battle of Bull Run. Then the prospect was all gloom, and the observation of the London Times, that "Richmond was safe for this year," seemed very like a truism. Three months have not yet passed, and the army is upon its feet again. Before another month elapsed,

we shall see that army swelled to a million, and we shall see some grand events transpiring.

The London Times of July 30th was of the opinion that our civil war would end with this summer. Has the Times stumbled for once upon a true prophecy? The news from McClellan will very soon enable us to decide this question.

From Gen. BURNSIDE's army we learn that on

Friday the rebels captured a wagon train, with

mules, near Fredericksburg, together with sixty-

seven teams and soldiers, who had given out on

the march, and had been picked up by the train.

The wagons, eleven in number, also contained a large lot of blankets and commissary stores, belonging to Hatch's brigade. They had become separated from the balance of the train by some miles, and the rebel cavalry, coming from Guiney's, intercepted them.

THE NEWS.

Hon. BEVERLEY JOHNSON has arrived in Washington. Mr. McLELLAN's orders are received, and he is to proceed to New Orleans and take command, and report his opinion on the merits of the official acts of Gen. Butler in seizing certain large amounts of treasure in the custody of foreign consuls, and which is almost inevitable, if there is any value in skilfully laid plans, whose execution is entrusted to our ablest officers.

What this movement is, we are not presumed to know, and therefore, cannot at the present time divine. Of this, however, we are confident, that it will startle and delight every Union-loving citizen, and carry apprehension to the breast of every traitor. Richmond is a doomed city.

The aspect of affairs has totally changed since the battle of Bull Run. Then the prospect was all gloom, and the observation of the London Times, that "Richmond was safe for this year," seemed very like a truism. Three months have not yet passed, and the army is upon its feet again. Before another month elapsed,

we shall see that army swelled to a million, and we shall see some grand events transpiring.

The London Times of July 30th was of the opinion that our civil war would end with this summer. Has the Times stumbled for once upon a true prophecy? The news from McClellan will very soon enable us to decide this question.

From Gen. BURNSIDE's army we learn that on

Friday the rebels captured a wagon train, with

mules, near Fredericksburg, together with sixty-

seven teams and soldiers, who had given out on

the march, and had been picked up by the train.

The wagons, eleven in number, also contained a large lot of blankets and commissary stores, belonging to Hatch's brigade. They had become separated from the balance of the train by some miles, and the rebel cavalry, coming from Guiney's, intercepted them.

THE NEWS.

Hon. BEVERLEY JOHNSON has arrived in Washington. Mr. McLELLAN's orders are received, and he is to proceed to New Orleans and take command, and report his opinion on the merits of the official acts of Gen. Butler in seizing certain large amounts of treasure in the custody of foreign consuls, and which is almost inevitable, if there is any value in skilfully laid plans, whose execution is entrusted to our ablest officers.

What this movement is, we are not presumed to know, and therefore, cannot at the present time divine. Of this, however, we are confident, that it will startle and delight every Union-loving citizen, and carry apprehension to the breast of every traitor. Richmond is a doomed city.

The aspect of affairs has totally changed since the battle of Bull Run. Then the prospect was all gloom, and the observation of the London Times, that "Richmond was safe for this year," seemed very like a truism. Three months have not yet passed, and the army is upon its feet again. Before another month elapsed,

we shall see that army swelled to a million, and we shall see some grand events transpiring.

The London Times of July 30th was of the opinion that our civil war would end with this summer. Has the Times stumbled for once upon a true prophecy? The news from McClellan will very soon enable us to decide this question.

From Gen. BURNSIDE's army we learn that on

Friday the rebels captured a wagon train, with

mules, near Fredericksburg, together with sixty-

seven teams and soldiers, who had given out on

the march, and had been picked up by the train.

The wagons, eleven in number, also contained a large lot of blankets and commissary stores, belonging to Hatch's brigade. They had become separated from the balance of the train by some miles, and the rebel cavalry, coming from Guiney's, intercepted them.

THE NEWS.

Hon. BEVERLEY JOHNSON has arrived in Washington. Mr. McLELLAN's orders are received, and he is to proceed to New Orleans and take command, and report his opinion on the merits of the official acts of Gen. Butler in seizing certain large amounts of treasure in the custody of foreign consuls, and which is almost inevitable, if there is any value in skilfully laid plans, whose execution is entrusted to our ablest officers.

What this movement is, we are not presumed to know, and therefore, cannot at the present time divine. Of this, however, we are confident, that it will startle and delight every Union-loving citizen, and carry apprehension to the breast of every traitor. Richmond is a doomed city.

The aspect of affairs has totally changed since the battle of Bull Run. Then the prospect was all gloom, and the observation of the London Times, that "Richmond was safe for this year," seemed very like a truism. Three months have not yet passed, and the army is upon its feet again. Before another month elapsed,

we shall see that army swelled to a million, and we shall see some grand events transpiring.

The London Times of July 30th was of the opinion that our civil war would end with this summer. Has the Times stumbled for once upon a true prophecy? The news from McClellan will very soon enable us to decide this question.

From Gen. BURNSIDE's army we learn that on

Friday the rebels captured a wagon train, with

mules, near Fredericksburg, together with sixty-

seven teams and soldiers, who had given out on

the march, and had been picked up by the train.

The wagons, eleven in number, also contained a large lot of blankets and commissary stores, belonging to Hatch's brigade. They had become separated from the balance of the train by some miles, and the rebel cavalry, coming from Guiney's, intercepted them.

THE NEWS.

Hon. BEVERLEY JOHNSON has arrived in Washington. Mr. McLELLAN's orders are received, and he is to proceed to New Orleans and take command, and report his opinion on the merits of the official acts of Gen. Butler in seizing certain large amounts of treasure in the custody of foreign consuls, and which is almost inevitable, if there is any value in skilfully laid plans, whose execution is entrusted to our ablest officers.

What this movement is, we are not presumed to know, and therefore, cannot at the present time divine. Of this, however, we are confident, that it will startle and delight every Union-loving citizen, and carry apprehension to the breast of every traitor. Richmond is a doomed city.

The aspect of affairs has totally changed since the battle of Bull Run. Then the prospect was all gloom, and the observation of the London Times, that "Richmond was safe for this year," seemed very like a truism. Three months have not yet passed, and the army is upon its feet again. Before another month elapsed,

we shall see that army swelled to a million, and we shall see some grand events transpiring.

The London Times of July 30th was of the opinion that our civil war would end with this summer. Has the Times stumbled for once upon a true prophecy? The news from McClellan will very soon enable us to decide this question.

From Gen. BURNSIDE's army we learn that on

Friday the rebels captured a wagon train, with

mules, near Fredericksburg, together with sixty-

seven teams and soldiers, who had given out on

the march, and had been picked up by the train.

The wagons, eleven in number, also contained a large lot of blankets and commissary stores, belonging to Hatch's brigade. They had become separated from the balance of the train by some miles, and the rebel cavalry, coming from Guiney's, intercepted them.

THE NEWS.

Hon. BEVERLEY JOHNSON has arrived in Washington. Mr. McLELLAN's orders are received, and he is to proceed to New Orleans and take command, and report his opinion on the merits of the official acts of Gen. Butler in seizing certain large amounts of treasure in the custody of foreign consuls, and which is almost inevitable, if there is any value in skilfully laid plans, whose execution is entrusted to our ablest officers.

What this movement is, we are not presumed to know, and therefore, cannot at the present time divine. Of this, however, we are confident, that it will startle and delight every Union-loving citizen, and carry apprehension to the breast of every traitor. Richmond is a doomed city.

The aspect of affairs has totally changed since the battle of Bull Run. Then the prospect was all gloom, and the observation of the London Times, that "Richmond was safe for this year," seemed very like a truism. Three months have not yet passed, and the army is upon its feet again. Before another month elapsed,

we shall see that army swelled to a million, and we shall see some grand events transpiring.

The London Times of July 30th was of the opinion that our civil war would end with this summer. Has the Times stumbled for once upon a true prophecy? The news from McClellan will very soon enable us to decide this question.

From Gen. BURNSIDE's army we learn that on

Friday the rebels captured a wagon train, with

mules, near Fredericksburg, together with sixty-