In this latitude gentlemen do not take cider to church with them, nor are they willing to risk damage to their clothes by carrying such commodities in their pockets. Philadelphiaus have good reason to value their garments, because they generally procure them at the Brown Stone Clothing Hall of Bockhill & Wilson, Nos. 603 and 605 Chestuat street, above Sixth, where suits that are worthy of the name are gotten up. Cicero acquired his wonderful command of the Latin language, his copia verborum, by translating Greek into Latin. William Pitt, with the same object in view, devoted ten years to the translation of Latin into English. He regarded words as his tools—the weapons with which he was to arm himself. Bufus Choate pursued this plan of translation through his whole life. For every Latin, Greek, French, or German word, he endesvoyed to find five or s'x corresponding English words.
