THE WAR.

It is undoubtedly the fact that intelligence of the highest importance, giving us tidings of a battle or of the flight of Lee, may be almost any day expected to reach our headquarters. It is equally a fact that most interesting attacks to the movements of 'Stonewall' Jackson. As to his plans we have yet learned nothing reliable, notwithstanding the reports of deserters, captured staff officers, and negroes. According to our despatches, his entire force, numbering about forty thousand men, including the corps of General Hill, is somewhere in the vicinity of Front Royal. In this position he evidently intends to withdraw such a force from Burnside as will leave the latter in danger of an attack from Lee, or, at least, to render an advance of our army too hazardous to be undertaken. But in what precise direction he hopes to accomplish this withdrawal, we are not yet informed. He may threaten Harper's Ferry, his pickets, in fact, have made their appearance; he may attempt a second invasion of Maryland, and one of his staff captured on Friday reported that Burnside would be in Cumberland within twenty-four hours of the receipt of our orders to retreat. It is not, however, to be taken except by a prolonged siege, for it is now fully garrisoned, and whatever Jackson does must be done at the cost of any available force. As for another advance on Maryland, we have to high an opinion of the judgment of the rebels, to imagine them capable of repeating their exploit in that direction. Jackson's grand object is to divide Burnside's army, and to send the decisive battle as long as possible. If he entertains any other purpose it must be subsidiary to this. More than this he can hardly hope to accomplish. It is, therefore, probable that he will remain in his position at Front Royal, keeping by his pickets, and, perhaps, as an evidence of kindness and condescension on the part of the rebels, he will send a detachment of his army to the aid of Lee, and, in the present critical situation of his army, with a retreat in contemplation, or perhaps as a project to be carried out before the arrival of the Federal army, to make ready to explore expeditions at any greater distance from the main body than it is at present.

Moving On.

Wherever we look, we see the armies of the Republic moving on to victory. In the East, General Burnside has reorganized his great army under great chiefs, and hereafter the Army of the Potomac will be the Army of the Republic. The management of such men as Sherman, Hooker, Franklin, and Sigel. General Dix is approaching Richmond from Suffolk, and the sounds of his march are heard in the mountains of North Carolina, and the mountains of Tennessee, and the flag of the Republic will soon float over more of the brave mountaineers who have suffered so much for their faith and loyalty. Everywhere moving on! From the North to the South, the East, and the West, the tides of war are surging and flowing towards the great vortex into which treason must in the end be engulfed. Everywhere a unity of purpose, a proud self-revering patriotism, a gallantry that has survived defeat and chastisement, and excited the admiration of the world, and the devotion of all to the cause of the Republic. To victory, peace, Victory that means something. Not merely dead men, and the roar of cannon, and the flight of rebel armies, and the hollow pomp that comes upon the uncertain breath of popular acclamation—for this is but the glitter and pomp of glory, and the glitter and pomp of glory is but a great and noble spirit that will awaken the spirit of manhood everywhere, redeeming the world, advancing our civilization, attesting our right to the high name of freemen we so proudly wear—something immortal and sublime, making this generation immortal, and the name of the Republic immortal. Who Shall be United States Senator?

The Opposition politicians were in an agony of fear at the prospect that their assumed majority of one in the Legislature of the State might divide into an appalling minority, until they convinced themselves that they were entirely safe, because no Democrat would venture to vote except under the lash and dictation of the majority. It is not, however, to be taken except by a prolonged siege, for it is now fully garrisoned, and whatever Jackson does must be done at the cost of any available force. As for another advance on Maryland, we have to high an opinion of the judgment of the rebels, to imagine them capable of repeating their exploit in that direction.
