esson, G. 52	nor is it against a member's almous, nor is at indicastic, nor is it against a member duty as a corporator to refuse to resign. It is true the return, among other things, sets up that, at the meeting at which the expulsion took place, the circumstances of the case were fully discussed. The question naturally arises what case is here referred to—the offence against the peace and good order of the club room, or the refusal of the relator to resign from the club? If the former, then the by-law restricting the meeting of the corporators to the consideration of the subject specified in the notice was disregarded; if the latter, namely, the refusal of the relator to resign, thenwe are clear in our opinion the cause of expulsion thus assigned was illegal, and was not warranted by any express, much less by the reserved and inherent, powers of the charter. The case of the St. Patrick Society was much stronger in point, as illustrating this principle, than the present case; there a by-law provided for the expulsion of a member for vilitying any of the members of the corporation, and for this cause, and under this by-law, a corporation, and for this cause, and under this by-law, a corporation was distranchised; the Supreme Court declared the by-law void, and restored the member to the enjoyment of his corporate franchises. Here we have no by-law, making a refusal to resign at the request of the Board of Directors a ground of expulsion; and yet, without the express authority of the charter, without the pretence of by-law, this cause, and this alone, is assigned as justifying the expulsion. The irregularity is manifest, when the board resolved to call a special meeting of the club for the purpose of considering the refusal of a member to resign; in the notice assigning this as the subject to be considered at such meeting; and in the final action of	FOR ALBANY AND TROY.
