track, the money was recovered and restored to the loser. The boy was fully penitent under the suggestions of the officer, and promised reform. He fulfilled that promise well, and rose to something, like dis-tinction. He became a Sunday school teacher, and some time after the present rebellion broke out, en-tered the volunteer corps, and fought his way up to some promotion. A short time since, a good-looking soldier, with arm in a sling, entered the Continental. After walk-ing about that palatial establishment for some time, he observed Mr. Russell, who looks pretty much the same now as he did twenty years ago. The soldier officer stepped up to him with extended hand, and casually remarked, "I guess you don't recognize me, sir you are Mr. Russell, are you not? "I am, sir," said William respectfully, at the same time gazing at the stranger thoughtfully. It was not long before they mutually understood each other, and had a long conversation. The sol-dier of the present was, nearly twenty years since, the boy who "hooked" a watermelon as his first officer, and had a long conversation. The sol-dier of the present was, nearly twenty years since, the boy who "hooked" a watermelon as his first officer, and had a bing conversation. The sol-dier of the present was, nearly twenty years ince, the boy who "hooked" a watermelon as his first officer, and the helped himself to the contents of a "ill. He is now a highly-honorable man, and admits, that the kindness of Officer Russell made such an im-pression on his youthful mind that he has never for-gotten it. This little narrative is not without its moral; some of the defacitive officers of the present day may apply it with beneficial results.

- States District Court-Judge Cad-walader. The hearing on habeas corpus, in the case of Lane, a drafted man from the Fourth district, which was to have come up on Saturday. at 12 o'clock, was postponed for the present. The Board of Enrolment for that district in their return to the writ, set forth that they had not yet finally decided upon the evidence before them, as to the age of the relator. Counsel for the relator then asked that the matter be permited to reat for the present without quash-ing the writ, until this final decision is made. This was allowed.

Court of Oyer and Terminer and Quarter Sessions—Judge Ludlow. The most of Saturday's session was occupied with the hearing of writs of habeas corpus in the cases of enlisted minors. The recruiting officers in this eity persist in furnishing the court with its entire Saturday business, almost, by enlisting boys from twelve to eighteen years of age, whose parents im-mediately sue out writs of habeas corpus for their discharge.

THE POLICE.

Early Indiscretion and Mature Valor. Years ago, when Officer Russell, now stationed specially at the "Continental, was one of the old de-tective force of "he city, a boy was arrested for rob-bing a till of the s. "all amount of about three doi-lars. The youth s, outly denied the accusation, though the circumstan, "es of the case seemed to weigh heavily against him." The woman who was robbed had recently buried he maintain a home for herself and children. This she 'did by selling cakes, candies, spruce-beer, ko. The beree doilars, though small, was a heavy loss to her. "The boy, who was only about ten years of ..."e", was known to have been in the practice of sticking-a small hook into a watermelon, a cantelope, and by means of a string pull it to him when an opportunity should offer. But robbing the till outright he de-nied in the most positive manner, and insisted on his innocence.

should offer. But robbing the till outright he de-nied in the most positive manner, and insisted on his innocence. Seated in the private room after the hearing, De-tective Russell, knowing that important arrests had been made from various hints thrown out by lads similarly dircumstanced, had a private interview with the youth in question. "You know you stole that money," said he. "I didn't do no such thing," replied the lad. "Come, come, my son, you'll die in prison yet; you are on the bad road that leads some people to the gallows. That woman is fretting herself to death about the loss of that money." "I don't care. I can't help it. I didn't take it," still continued the boy. "Suppose she'd die, don't you think that your conscience would chide you ' You, know you stole a watermelon from her." "Well, that wasn't money, was it?" "No, but it was a beginning. Now, come tell us sil about it. How much did you give Jimmy? "I didn't give him nothing; I didn't take the money, I tell you," still persisted the boy. The conversation was kept up for an hour. To all the questions propounded by the shrewd officer, the lad ecemed to have a ready answer. He was rather more intelligent than the ordinary run of theofiner finally operated so much upon the lad's.
