ume since a man who was rather have up, out who managed to keep up a ganteel appearance, called upon several Secession sympathizers, and made their acquaintance. He was from the sunny South, and had the confidence of Jeff Davis. The man had evidently travelled and seen much of the world. He was well received by his sympathizing Northern friands; spoke of his cotton and his negroes; and borrowed money, to the extent of $450. This he repaid. Other transactions took place, and finally he won the confidence of high-toned sympathizers. He left Philadelphia under the pretext of going to Richmond. He was the bearer of several letters-one of them being for Jeff Davis himself-from a certain Mirs. B—, who resides in the interior of Pennsylvania. While his sympathizers though the was in Richmond, he was travelling in other parts. In six weeks he returned, bringing an answer to two of the letters. He had also with him ten thou-sand dollars in Confederate scrip, which he desired to get rid of, but his friends did not seem at all anxious to negotiate. He offered the scrip at great discount. He arged that any gentleman who owned immovable property in the Southern Oonfederacy, such as land, would find it a safe investment, for every dollar of it would be redeemed after the war was over. Among the sympathizers was a gentleman from

CLEANSING THE STREETS.—Some of the streets are now being cleansed by order of the Board of Health; the City Councils, because of bickerings and jealouay, failed to make any arrangement to have the city kept in any thing like good order. The Councils adjourned over, and availed themselves of the summer vacation; and, while most of them ware juxuristing in the pure air of the mountains, or the salubrious breezes of the ocean, the great mass of the community, the poor, hard-working, industrious million, were left to inhale the dangerous stench arising from the filthy streets. The Board of Health, whose business it certainly is to guard the people from epidemical disease if possible, assumed the control of the street cleaning under the proviso of an old law. This course was positively necessary, or, by this time, there might have been at peatilence, sweeping off hundreds of our citizens. The streets in the Eighth waid have already been attended to by some one, we know not whom, but who seems to understand the business well. The dirt is piled or scraped up into rows on both sides of the street, and carted away promptly. It is not left in volatile mo-numents, to be scattered by any wind that might blow, or to be melted into mud by any rain that might blow, or to be melted into mud by any rain that might blow, or to be melted into mud by any rain that might blow, or to be melted into mud by any rain that might blow, or to be melted into mud by any rain that might blow, or to be melted into mud by any rain that might blow, or to be melted into mud by any rain that might blow, or to be melted into mud by any rain that might blow, or to be melted into mud by any rain that might blow, or to be melted into mud by any rain that might blow, or to be melted into mud by any rain that sight blow, or to be melted into mud by any rain that sight blow, or to be melted into mud by any rain that sight blow, or to be melted into mud by any rain that sight blow, or to be melted into mud by any rain that sight blow, or to be melted in

A MEETING OF THE FRIENDS OF THE UNION.-The ancient village of Frankford was in a blaze of glory on Moniday night, on the occasion of a Union meeting being held there. Through there was no particular effort made to have a grand turn-out, or patriotic upriaing of the peoole, yet a large number of the yeomanry were there, and made the country vocal with their enthusiastic cheers. It is a rare thing to witness such deep interest and enthu-siasm as originayed at this meeting. Everybody seemed to be there. Soldiers, with leg-stumps and arm-stumps, appealed in ailent eloquence to the po-pulace. The Hon. James M. Scovel, of New Jer-sey; Hon. Leonard Myers, and Geo. H. Earle, Eaq., delivered eloquent addresses, that awakened many an outburst of applause. Mr. Scovel, coming from a sister State, paid a handsome and merited tribute to President Luncoin and Governor Curtin. He al-inded particularly to the untiring energy of the Go-vernor during the last invasion of the State of Penn-sylvanis. He was, in reality, a trusty sentinel on the watchig over and caring for the whole people of the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. The meeting closed with immense cheering for Gov.
